SINGHI JAIN SERIES

[A Short History Of The Series]

Babu S'ri Dalchandji Singhi, in whose sacred memory the present Series is inaugurated by his son, Babu S'ri Bahadur Singhji Singhi was born in Azimganj (Murshidabad) in the Vikrama Samvat 1921 (1865 A.D.), and died in Calcutta on the 30th December, 1927. The Singhi family of Azimganj occupies almost the foremost rank among the few hundred Jaina families which migrated to Bengal from Rajputana in the latter part of the 17th century and took their domicile in the district of Murshidabad. The family rose to its present position and prominence chiefly through the energy and enterprise of that self-made man, Babu Dalchandji Singhi.

Owing to financial difficulties, Dalchandji Singhi had abruptly to cut short his educational career and join the family business at the early age of 14. The family had been carrying on business in the name of Messrs Hurisingh Nehalchand for a long time though, in those days, it was not at all a prominent firm. But having taken the reins of the firm in his own hands, Babu Dalchandji developed it on a very large scale; and it was mainly through his business acumen, industry, perseverance and honesty that this comparatively unknown firm of "Hurisingh Nehalchand" came to be reckoned as the foremost jute concern with branches in almost all the important jute centres of Bengal. The fruits of Dalchandji Singhi's toils were immense, and the reputation of the firm in commercial circles was indeed unique.

Having thus brought his jute business to the most flourishing condition, Babu Dalchandji Singhi diverted his attention to the mineral resources of India and spent many lacs of rupees in prospecting the coal fields of Korea State (C. P.), limestone deposits of Sakti State and Akaltara, and the bauxite deposits of Belgaum and Sawantwadi and Ichalkaranji States. His scheme for the Hiranyakeshi Hydro-Electric Project and manufacture of aluminium from bauxite ores, the first of its kind in India, is yet to be developed. His mining firm, Messrs Dalchand Bahadur Singh is reputed to be one of the foremost colliery proprietors in India. While so engaged in manifold business, he also acquired and possessed vast Zamindary estates spreading over the districts of 24-Perganas, Rangpur, Purnea, Maldah, etc.

But the fame of Babu Dalchandji Singhi was not confined to his unique position in commercial circles. He was equally well-known for his liberality and large-heartedness, though he always fought shy of publicity attached to charitable acts and often remained anonymous while feeding the needy and patronizing the poor. A few instances of his liberality are given below.

When Mahatma Gandhi personally visited his place in 1926, for a contribution to the Chittaranjan Seva Sadan, Babu Dalchandji Singhi gladly handed over to him a purse of Rs. 10,000.

His War contribution consisted in his purchasing War Bonds to the value of Rs. 3,00,000; and his contribution at the Red Cross Sales, held in March 1917, under the patronage of H. E. Lord Carmichael on Government House grounds, Calcutta, amounted to approximately Rs. 21,000, in which he paid Rs. 10,000 for one bale of jute which he had himself contributed. His anonymous donations are stated to have amounted to more than one lac of rupees.

In his private life Babu Dalchandji Singhi was a man of extremely simple and unostentatious habits. Plain living and high thinking was his ideal. Although he had been denied a long academic career, his knowledge, erudition and intellectual endowments were of a very high order indeed. His private studies were vast and constant. His attitude towards life and the world was intensely religious, and yet he held very liberal views and had made a synthetic study of the teachings of all religions. He was also well-versed in the Yoga darśana. During the latter part of his life he spent his days mostly in pilgrimage and meditation. Noted throughout the district and outside for his devoutness, kindness and piety, he is remembered even now as a pride of the Jaina community.

During the last days of his life, Babu Dalchandji Singhi cherished a strong desire to do something towards encouraging research in important works of Jaina literature and publishing their editions scientifically and critically prepared by eminent scholars. But fate had decreed otherwise; and before this purpose of his could become a reality, he expired.

However, Babu Bahadur Singhii Singhi, worthy son of the worthy father, in order to fulfil the noble wish of the late Dalchandji Singhi, continued to help institutions like the Jaina Pustaka Pracaraka Mandala, Agra; the Jaina Gurukula, Palitana; the Jaina Vidyābhavana, Udaipur, etc.; and also patronized many individual scholars engaged in the publication of Jaina literature. Besides, with a view to establishing an independent memorial foundation to perpetuate the memory of his father, he consulted our common friend, Pandit Sri Sukhlalji, Professor of Jainism in the Benares Hindu University, an unrivalled scholar of Jaina Philosophy, who had also come in close contact with the late Babu Dalchandji Singhi, and whom the latter had always held in very high esteem. In the meanwhile, Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi incidentally met the late Poet, Rabindranath Tagore, and learnt of his desire to get a chair of Jaina studies established in the Visva-Bhāratī, Santiniketan. Out of his respect for the Poet, Babu S'ri Bahadur Singhji readily agreed to found the chair (provisionally for three years) in revered memory of his dear father, and invited me to take charge of the same. I accepted the offer very willingly, and felt thankful for the opportunity of spending even a few years in the cultural and inspiring atmosphere of Viśva-Bhāratī, the grand creation of the great Poet Rabindranath.

During the period of 10 years of my principalship of the Gujarat Purătattva Mandir, Ahmedabad, and even before that period, I had begun collecting materials of historical and philological importance, and of folk-lore etc., which had been lying hidden in the great Jaina Bhandars of Patan, Ahmedabad, Baroda, Cambay, etc. I induced my noble friend Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi, also to start a Series which would publish works dealing with the vast materials in my possession, and also with other allied important Jaina texts and studies prepared on the most modern scientific methods. Hence the inauguration of the present Singhi Jaina Series.

Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi is himself a great connoisseur and patron of art and culture. He has an unbounded interest in creative researches in antiquities, and has a very good collection of rare and historic paintings, manuscripts, coins, books, and jewellery. On many occasions the organisers of various exhibitions throughout India have had to call upon him for loan of his art collection; and he has gladly responded to their requests without fail. In 1931 he was the recipient of a gold medal from the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan as a mark of appreciation of his unique collection. He is a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts (London); a member of the Royal Asiatic Society of Bengal, Bangīya Sāhitya Pariṣat, the Indian Research Institute, and many other similar institutions. He is also one of the Founder-members of the Bhāratīya Vīdyā Bhavan, Bombay. He was one of the prominent working members of the Executive body of the "All-India Exhibition of Indian Architecture and Allied Arts and Crafts" held in Calcutta in February, 1935.

Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi is a prominent leader of the Swetambar Jaina community. He was elected President of the Jaina Swetambar Conference held in Bombay in 1926. He is also connected with many other Jaina conferences and institutions either as president, patron or trustee.

Though thus a leading figure in the Jaina community, Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi has always maintained a truly national and non-sectarian spirit and helped also many institutions which are outside the Jain fold. For example, he has donated Rs. 12,500 for constructing a building at Allahabad for the Hindi Sahitya Parishat. In fact his generosity knows no distinction of caste or creed.

Really speaking, he does not in the least hanker after name and fame even though he is a multi-millionaire and a big Zamindar, and even though he is a man of superior intellect and energy. He is by nature taciturn and a lover of solitude. Art and literature are the pursuits of his choice. He is very fond of seeing and collecting rare and invaluable specimens of ancient sculpture, painting, coins, copperplates, inscriptions, manuscripts etc. He spends all his spare time in seeing and examining the rarities which he has collected in his room as well as in reading. He is seldom seen outside and he rarely mixes with society and friendly circles. Wealthy persons like himself usually have a number of fads and hobbies such as seeing the games and races, visiting clubs, undertaking pleasure trips etc., and they spend enormously over them, but Singhiji has none of these habits. Even the managers of his colliery and zamindari travel in first class while he, the master, travels mostly in the second class. Instead of wasting money on such things, he spends large sums on collecting ancient things and valuable curios and on the preservation and publication of important literature. Donations to institutions and charities to individuals are, by him, for the most part given anonymously. I know it from my own experience that these gifts, donations and charities reach a very high figure at the end of every year. But he is so modest that on his being requested so often by me he did not show the least inclination to part with the names and whereabouts of the individuals and institutions that were the recipients of such financial aid from him. By chance I came to know of a very recent example, just now, indicative of this characteristic of his nature. Last year he shifted, like other innumerable inhabitants of Calcutta, his headquarters to Azimgani (Dist. Murshidabad) when the fear of the Japanese invasion was looming large, and decided to stay there with his whole family during war time. Taking into consideration the present grievous condition of the country as well as the excessive scarcity of the grains in Bengal, he had stocked grains in large quantities with a view to distributing them gratis according to his capacity. Thereafter the problem of food became rather more serious and at present the prices have risen inconceivably high. Babu Bahadur Singhii Singhi could have earned four to five lacs of rupees if he had, like many other miserly merchants, sold off the hoarded lot of grains, taking undue advantage of the prevailing conditions. But he resisted the temptations, and has been daily distributing freely the grains among thousands of poor people who shower blessings on him; and he enjoys a deep self-satisfaction. This is the most recent example that puts us in adequate knowledge of his silent munificence. Really he is a very silent and solid worker and he has no desire to take active part in any controversies, social or political, though he has sufficient fitness and energy to do so. Still however he is skilful enough to do what is proper at the particular time. The following incident will best illustrate this statement. It was in the fitness of things that a wealthy multi-millionaire like him should give an appropriate contribution in the war funds. With this view he arranged in the second week of December, 1941, an attractive show, styled Singhi Park Mela in the garden of his residential place at Calcutta in which all the local people and officers of name and fame, including the Governor of Bengal, Sir John Arthur Herbert and lady Herbert as well as the Commander-in-chief (now the GovernorGeneral) Viscount Wavell, had also taken part with enthusiasm. This show fetched thousands of rupees which were considered substantial financial help to the war funds.

The series was started, as mentioned above, in 1931 A.D. when I worked as a Founder-Director of the Singhi Jain Chair in Viśvabhāratī at Shantiniketan, at Singhiji's request. It was, then, our aspiration to put the Singhi Jain Chair and the Singhi Jain Series on a permanent basis and to create a centre at Viśvabhāratī for the the studies of Jain cult in deference to the wishes of the late Poet Rabindranath Tagore. But unfortunately I was forced to leave this very inspiring and holy place on account of unfavourable climatic conditions etc. which I had to face during my stay of about four years there. I shifted, therefore, from Viśvabhāratī to Ahmedabad where I had formerly resided and worked in those glorious days when the Gujarat Vidyāpīth and the Purātattva Mandir had been established as a part of the movement for national awakening and cultural regeneration. I went there in the hope that the reminiscences of those days and the proximity of those places would serve as sources of inspiration in my literary pursuits.

In the intervening period the activity of the Puratattva Mandir had languished and along with the arrest of its many scholar-workers the vast, precious collection of books also was confiscated and placed in custody by the British Government. After some years when it was refurnedit lay unadored, like images, without its worshippers in the Mandir. My old friends and colleagues of the Puratattva Mandir and the Vidyāpīth had, like myself, taken to different pursuits at different places. When some of them, namely, Prof. R. C. Parikh (who is, at present, the Director of the Postgraduate and Research Departments of the Gujarat Vernacular Society, Ahmedabad), Prof. R. V. Pathak (who is, at present, the Vice-Principal of the S. L. D. Arts College, Ahmedabad), Pandit Sukhlalji (who is the Head of the Department of Jain Studies in the Hindu University, at Benares) and myself occasionally met, we all revived our old sweet memories of the Vidyapīth and the Puratattva Mandir, and of also the possibility of a regeneration of the Mandir or of the establishment of another similar institution at Ahmedabad and enjoyed in dreaming dreams of schemes of such institutions.

During this period my aim of life had centred round the Singhi Jain Series and I devoted every iota of my energy to its development and progress.

In June, 1938, I received, to my agreeable surprise, a letter from Sri K. M. Munshi (who was, then, the Home Minister of the Congress)

Ministry of the Bombay Presidency), my esteemed friend and the originator and the founder of the Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan. In that letter he had mentioned that Sheth Srī Mungalal Goenka had placed a liberal sum of two lacs of rupees at his disposal for the establishment of a good academic institution for Indological studies and he had asked me to come down to Bombay to discuss and prepare a scheme for that. Accordingly, I came here and saw Munshiji. Knowing that he had a fervent desire of founding at Bombay an institution of the type of the Puratattva Mandir, I was extremely delighted and I showed my eagerness to offer for that such services as might be possible for me. We, then, began to draft out a scheme and after some deliberations and exchange of ideas the outline of the Bhāratīva Vidvā Bhavan was settled. Accordingly, on the auspicious full-moon day of the Kārttik of 1995 (V. S.) the opening ceremony of the Bhāratīva Vidvā Bhavan took place amidst the clappings and rejoicings of a magnificent party which was arranged at the residence of Munshiji. The Bhavan has completed five years of its career on the last Karttiki full-moon day. The brilliant achievement and the wide publicity which the Bhavan has been able to secure in this short period of five years, bear eloquent testimony to the inexhaustible fund of energy and unsurpassed skill of Munshiji. As I am inseparably linked up with it from the very conception, I also feel the same amount of joy and interest at the Bhavan's progress as Srī Munshiji, its Founder-President and therefore I have been always offering my humble services in its various undertakings and activities.

On the other hand, the Singhi Jain Series is the principal aim of my remaining life and the results of my thinking, meditation, researches and writings have all been devoted to the development of the Series. As life passes on, the time of activity is also naturally shortened and therefore it is quite appropriate, now, for me to chalk out lines of its future programme and permanence.

As Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi, the noble founder and the sole patron of the Series, has placed the whole responsibility of the Series on me from its inception, he has also the right to expect that more and more works may more speedily and splendidly be published. I have neither seen nor come across any other gentleman who can match with him as regards generosity and unbounded zeal for the revival of ancient literature. On the works of the Series he has spent through me more than 50,000 rupees till now. But he has not even once asked me, during this long period of a dezen years, as to how and for what works the amount was spent. Whenever the account was submitted to him, he did not ask for even the least informatiou and sanctioned it casting merely a formal glance on the account sheets. But he discussed very minutely the details regarding things such as the paper, types, printing, binding, get-up, etc. as well as internal subjects like Preface and others, and occasionally gives very useful suggetrions thereon with deep interest. His only desire being to see the publication of as many works as possible in his life-time, he is always ready to spend as much, after it, as required. He does not labour under a delusion that the things should be done in this or that way when he is no more.

As these were his ideas and desires concerning the Series and as every day that passes leaves me all the more convinced of the fickleness of my advanced life too, it was imperative for us to draw out a scheme for its future programme and management. Just at this time a desire dawned in the heart of S'rī Munshiji, to the effect that if the Singhi Jain Series be associated with the Bharatīya Vidya Bhavan, both the institutions would not only be admirably progressing but the Series would get permanence and the Bhavan, unique honour and fame by its hereby becoming an important centre for the studies of Jain culture and the publication of Jain literature. This well-intentioned desire of Munshiji was much liked by me and I conveyed it in a proper form to Singhiji who is, besides being a Founder-Member of the Bhayan, also an intimate friend of Munshiji since long. Eventually he welcomed this idea of Munshiji. I also came to a final decision of associating the Series with the Bhavan, having consulted my most sincere friend, life-long companion and co-worker, Pt. Sukhlalji, who is a well-wisher and an active inspirer of the Series, and who is also an esteemed friend of Babu Bahadur Singhji. Luckily we all four met in Bombay in the bright half of the last Vaiśākh and on one auspicious day we all sat together and unanimously resolved, at the residence of Munshiji, to entrust the Series to the Bhavan.

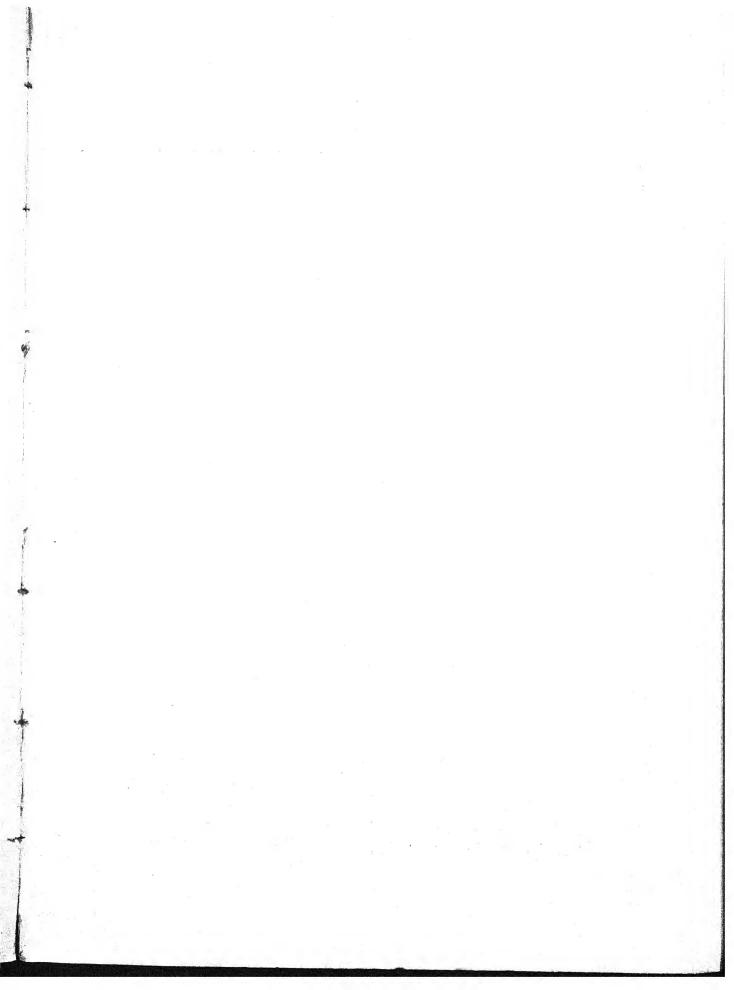

According to that resolution, the publication of the Series is now under the management of the Bhāratīya Vidyā Bhavan and the office of the Series is also permanently located in the building of the Bhavan.

In addition to transferring all sorts of copyright of the Series, Singhiji has also donated a liberal sum of Rs. 10,000 which will be spent on erecting a hall, to be named after him, in a prominent place in the Bhavan. In appreciation of this generous donation of Singhiji, the Bhavan has also resolved to style permanently the Department of Jain Studies as the "Singhī Jain S'āstra S'īkṣāpīṭh".

Thus the Singhi Jain Series, which is the fruit of the enlightened liberality of Babu Bahadur Singhji Singhi, is flourishing under the management of the Bhāratīya Vidyā Bhavan and contributing to the advancement of भारतीय विद्या-Indological Studies – in all their aspects.

PREFACE

LMOST from childhood, I had an aptitude for hearing and knowing the Puranic and Epic stories. When I was fourteen-fifteen, and could read a bit, I became a pupil of a monk of the Sthanakavasi sect of the Jaina Śvetāmbara community. Born in a Rājput family devoted to Śiva and Visnu, and brought up under the influence of Hindu samskaras in my childhood, quite instinctively I looked upon Rāma and Kṛṣṇa as the divinity and addressed Siva as the Paramesvara. A gradual change came on me after my becoming a Jaina monk. The monks, according to their religious prescriptions, visit different places and preach religious and ethical principles to their audience by narrating stories. The Jainas in villages are not quite conversant with the ideology and principles of their religion; and ordinarily they are accustomed to listen to the various topics of the Mahābhārata, Rāmāyana, Bhāgavata etc. which are commonly popular with the orthodox Hindu community. Being a minor community, the Jainas, on many occasions, it is quite natural, are influenced by the samskaras and ideas of the other Hindus who form an overwhelmingly majority community with dominating social position. To guard against such an influence and to confirm them in the Jaina faith, the Jaina monks often criticise the inconsistent and unnatural details of the Purānas, Mahābhārata, Rāmāyana etc. in the presence of their Śrāvakas whom they want to convince about the hollowness of Vedic and Purānic tales and whose faith in Jainism they want to nourish by didactic tales and religious sermons. Literary example, as we know, is a powerful instrument for the moulding of character. To impress on the mind of the masses the specific ethical and religious principles, the religious teachers and preachers, all over the world and from times immemorial, have used the legends and tales which provide the hearers with examples and principles which they can easily follow. The Jaina monks are in no way an exception.

After attending such sermons of Jaina monks, my instinctive inclinations were being gradually changed, and my attachment for Jaina traditions and tales became deeper and deeper. As a rule, the Sthānakavāsi monks possessed no liking, worth noting, for the study of any branch of literature. They were least acquainted with Sanskrit and Prākrit languages, nor did they care to study them. They had, consequently, no idea of the vast and varied heritage of Jaina literature enriched by the remarkable contributions of eminent Svetāmbara and Digambara authors. At the most, they were conversant with and repeatedly read a few late, vernacular texts such as Dhālasāgara and Dhanyasālibhadra-caüpāi which are of quite ordinary merits. After reading a couple of such texts, my desire for reading many more such stories went on increasing, but they were not then available to me.

A couple of years after my initiation into the order, I happened to go to Ujjain with my teacher and other brother monks. In the Dharma-sthanaka there, among the Sastras collected by the ancestor monks of my teacher, I chanced to see certain Mss. of Bālāvabodha paraphrases on some Sūtras and Kathānakas. It was for the first time in my life that I saw there the Mss. of the Bhuvanabhānucarita-Bālāvabodha and Dhūrtākhyāna-Bālāvabodha. At that stage I could not read their script, nor could I understand their language, with ease; still, after strenuous efforts and repeated reading, I could manage to grasp the contents of the Bhuvanabhānucarita-Bālāvabodha. I liked it immensely, and I mentioned it to my Teacher. He grew angry with me; he at once snatched away the Ms. from me, and quietly put it in the box as before. I came to know, later on, that my Teacher had heard that the Carita contained references to the worship of Jaina temples and of images of Jina: of course, my Teacher had never read it himself. His intention was that a raw mind like that of myself should not be influenced by such stories that did not conform to the accepted creed of the Sthānakavāsi Sampradāya. Fascinated by its very title, he, however, kept with himself and began reading the Dhurtakhyana-Balavabodha. He finished it in a couple of days, and also recommended it to me that it contained nice stories which are quite useful for sermons. He had read it for the first time; and under his advice I began to read it zealously and respectfully. I read it so often, and mastered its contents so thoroughly, as if it was a text book for some examination. The Ms. furnished no details about its author and date; nor did I possess any curiosity to know these things at that time: my mental horizon was not wide enough for such an enquiry. When we left that place after the Cāturmāsa, the Ms. was put in its box; that must be, if I remember right, during the rainy season of 1905. That is how, quite indirectly and accidentally, I came to be acquainted, during my student-life, with the Dhurtakhyana of Haribhadra.

Later on, after some 8 or 10 years, as a monk of the Śvetāmbara Mūrtipūjaka Sampradāya, I had the good fortune of inspecting the Jaina Bhaṇḍāra at Pātan. In the meantime I studied Sanskrit and Prākrit; and my zest for perviewing the rich and varied range of Jaina literature was increasing. The Mss. on which the present edition of the Dhūrtākhyāna is based were first seen by me at this time. After studying more about the work and its authors, I desired that this work should be printed and published. When this desire occurred to me, I never dreamt, being quite aware of my ability then, that some day in the future I would have the opportunity of editing it. After some more years of study my mastery of Prākrit increased; and at the suggestion of my scholar-friend, the late lamented C. D. Dalal, the original organiser of the Gaikwad Oriental Series, I began to edit the Kumārapāla-pratibodha of Somaprabhācārya for that Series from a single palm-leaf Ms. found in the Pātan Bhandāra. Since then I earnestly hoped for an opportunity to edit the Dhūrtākhyāna.

It was in 1931, at Śāntiniketana, that the idea of the Singhī Jaina Granthamālā was conceived; and along with many other Sanskrit and Prākrit works, I decided to include the Dhūrtākhyāna also in the Mālā. The Mss. of it, seen by me many years back at Pātan, were procured; and the press copy was prepared. But as my hands were fully occupied with many a book in the press, its printing could not be begun till as late as 1941. The Pātan Mss. were lying with me for years together; and when the eminent organiser of the Pātan Bhaṇḍāras, Munirāj Śrī Puṇyavijayaji, specially pressed me to return the Mss., the happy moment of beginning its printing arrived. Consequently, today I feel happy to see that I am able to present this work to the scholarly world as the 19th volume of the Singhī Jaina Granthamālā.

My original plan was to present the Prākrit text, to give a Hindi or Gujarāti translation, and to reproduce, in an appendix, the various relevant extracts from the Mahābhārata, Rāmāyaṇa and Purāṇas. In fact, some excerpts were collected too. In the meanwhile, an old and independent Ms. of Sanghatilaka's Sanskrit Version of the Dhurtakhyana also was found at Patan; and I was tempted to include that also in this edition. When the Prākrit and Sanskrit texts were printed, I learnt that there is a Ms. of the Gujarāti Bālāvabodha of the Dhū. in the Govt. collection of Mss. deposited at the Bhandarkar Oriental Research Institute, Poona. I got the Ms. and inspected it. Finding that the study of its language would be of special importance in grasping the earlier phases of Gujarāti and western Rājasthānī, I thought it proper to put that also in this Volume. Thus we have, in this edition, the critical text of the original Prākrit Dhūrtākhyāna of Haribhadrasūri of the 8th century, then the metrical Sanskrit version of the same by Sanghatilaka of the 15th century, and also an anonymous rendering in the Lokabhāsā of the 16th or 17th century.

I intended in the beginning to write an Introduction in Hindi or Gujarāti, giving some details about Haribhadra's date and the contents of this work. But when I learnt that this book was prescribed by the University of Bombay in the B. A. course for Ardhamāgadhī, I thought that the edition should contain a thorough study of the work for the benefit of students for whom it was being prescribed. With this idea in mind, I requested my learned friend Dr. A. N. Upadhye, whose study in this connection is both deep and wide, to contribute a critical essay on the Dhūrtākhyāna for this volume. In connection with his original paper on the Apabhramśa Dharmaparīkṣā which was submitted to the All-India Oriental Conference, Hyderabad, and of which he sent to me an advance copy, he had already made a close study of the Dhūrtākhyāna. It was very kind of him that he willingly and readily acceeded to my request. Though he was occupied with editing various important works, within a comparatively short time, he sent to me quite an original, thorough, critical and elaborate Essay on the Dhūrtākhyāna which forms a most important and valuable part of this volume. In his learned dissertation, Dr. Upadhye has made a searching study of the different aspects of the Dhūrtākhyāna with remarkable penetration and judiciousness. I am not aware of any such substantial contribution on this subject by any other scholar.

Dr. Upadhye has not, however, discussed in his essay any details about the life, date, and works of Haribhadrasūri; he left them to me. Some twenty-five years back, the date of Haribhadrasūri had become a point for difference of opinion and dispute between European and Indian scholars. After reaching a decision in this matter, in the light of various fresh materials, especially the specific reference in the Kuvalayamālā of Uddyotanasūri, I presented to the First All-India Oriental Conference, Poona (1919), an essay in Sanskrit, 'Haribhadrācāryasya Samaya-nirnayah' in which I definitely proved that Haribhadra flourished at the close of the 8th century and at the beginning of the 9th century of the Vikrama era. That great German Orientalist, the late lamented Dr. Hermann Jacobi, had discussed this topic thoroughly and with remarkable originality; and he could be looked upon as an authority on the subject. When he read my paper, with typical impartiality he relinquished his earlier view and wholly accepted my conclusion; and that was a great encouragement to me. In the Introduction to his monumental edition of the Samarāiccakahā, published in the Bibliotheca Indica, No. 169, Asiatic Society of Bengal, 1926, he has presented a valuable and learned discussion about the date, life and works of Haribhadrasūri; and therein he has accepted the date of Haribhadra proposed by me and stated the same as an indisputable fact. I am not aware of any other article than this which concisely presents the requisite details about Haribhadra: his date, life and works. The time has not come to add anything specially new; so I thought it proper to give in this Volume the relevant portion of Dr. Jacobi's Introduction of the Samaraiccakahā.

The following Mss. have been used for the edition of Dhūrtākhyāna in Prākrit, Sanskrit and Old-Gujarāti.

Prākrit Text

- A = This was procured from the Samgha Bhandāra of Pātan. It contains eight folios, measuring 11½ by 4½ inches, of thin and strong indigenous paper, and written on both sides. On each page there are 16-17 lines. The hand-writing is clear and beautiful. One inch square unwritten space is left in the centre of the page. A print of the halftone block of the last page of it is given herewith.
- B = This also belongs to the Sangha Bhandara at Patan. It contains 11 folios measuring 10% by 4% inches, with 15-16 lines on each page; and its general condition is the same as that of Ms. A.

These two Mss. mention neither the name of the writer nor the date of writing. But from the general appearance, it seems that they might have been written at the close of the 16th century of the Vikrama era.

C = Besides the two above Mss., I got a modern Ms. from the Jñāna Bhaṇḍāra of Baroda. In all probability it is copied from Ms. A of Pātan, described above. The copyist has not rightly understood the old script; and he has often written ए for प, प for ए, स for म, म for स. With such mistakes the text has become quite corrupt. The readings of this Ms. were not thought to be necessary, and hence they are not recorded.

Sanskrit Text

- A = This belongs to the Samgha Bhandāra, Pātan. It contains 7 folios. It is quite old, and perhaps belongs to the close of the 16th century of the Vikrama era. In some places it shows corrections. A print of the halftone block of its last page is given herewith.
- B = It is a modern Ms. from the Baroda Bhandāra; some of its various readings are duly recorded. Perhaps due to hurry the copyist has altogether omitted the numbering of the concluding verses on the last two pages.

Gujarāti Text

- A = This Ms. containing 20 folios was procured from the Vijayadharmasūri Jnāna Bhaṇḍāra, Agra. From the concluding remark, it is clear that it was written in Vikram Samvat 1758 by Tārācanda, the pupil of Lakṣmīcanda of the Kharatara Gaccha, at Udayapura, in Rajputana.
- B = This belongs to the Govt. Collection of Poona. It contains 17 folios. No information about the copyist etc. is available. From the language, however, it looks somewhat older than A.

In conclusion, I wish to express my sincere thanks to my loving and learned friend, Dr. A. N. Upadhye. But for his willing and friendly cooperation, it would not have been possible for me to present this edition in such an attractive and appropriate form.

Lecturer in Skt., Pkt., and Modern Indian Languages,

Post. Graduate Department, Calcutta University.

Among the many series of works on the culture of ancient and medieval India published during the last few years, the Singhi Jain Series occupies a very prominent place. mainly with varied Jain texts of which the general students of Indian History up till now have no clear idea but which can in many ways supplement their fragmentary knowledge of different aspects of the cultural life of pre-modern India, this series should be reckoned as one of the most important contributions to Indological studies of our times. Sixteen volumes which have been published in the series during its brief existence of thirteen years include no less than fourteen texts and two translations. It is a pleasure to see that these texts edited with great diligence and the most careful scholarship belong to varying subjects like history, biography, logic, philosophy, poetry and folk-tales etc. Acarya Sri Jinavijaya Muniji whose name is a guarantee to the worth and accuracy of any publication, be it in Sanskrit, Prakrit or Apabhramsa or similar language, is the general editor of the series and is mainly responsible for its remarkable success. Hence it is needless to discuss individually the merits of works published. Of the published works no less than seven have been edited by Muni Sri Jinavijayaji himself and among his colleagues he has wellknown and able scholars like Pandit Sukhlalji and Dr. A. N. Upadhye, who have edited some of the publications in the series.

A review of the names of more than forty works which are either in the press or under preparation for the series will convince any student of Indology of the various aspects of its worth and usefulness. The excellent printing and get up of the volumes already published very pleasantly turn our attention to the princely munificence of Sriman Bahadur Singh Singhi of Calcutta and Murshidabad (Bengal) who founded the series in memory of his late father Shri Dalchandji Singhi. The general editor as well as the founder of the series are to be very sincerely congratulated on their highly valuable publications. It is our very earnest wish that the series may continue uninterruptedly with uniform success.

HARIBHADRA'S AGE, LIFE AND WORKS

Dr. HERMANN JACOBI

1. Haribhadra's Age.

The death of Haribhadra, the author of the Samarāicea-Kahā, is placed by Jaina tradition, which in this particular can be traced to the beginning of the 13th century A. D., in Vikrama samvat 585 or Vīra samvat 1055, corresponding to 529 A. D.¹ This date, however, was recognised to be wrong,² since Haribhadra was acquainted with the philosophy of Dharmakīrti who flourished about 650 A. D. The discussion at that time turned on the following point. Siddharṣi who finished the Upamitibhavaprapañcā Kathā on the 1st May, 906 A. D., calls, in the Pras'asti of that work, Haribhadra his dharmabodhakaro guruh. Now the question arose whether Haribhadra was actually Siddharṣi's teacher of the Sacred Law, or his Paramparāguru; in this investigation I took what eventually turned out the wrong side of the question.³ Meanwhile the Jainas had been publishing a number of Haribhadra's works which were found to contain many interesting details.⁴ But the evidence that finally settled the question of Haribhadra's age, was not furnished by any of his own works, but by the Kuvalayamālā, a Prākrit poem by Uddyotana, which he finished on the last day but one of the S'aka year 700,⁵ equal to the 21st March, 779 A. D. In the Pras'asti of

- At the end of an old MS. in Jesulmer of Haribhadra's Laghukşetrasamāsavrtti the date of the completion of this work is given in two verses as Vikrama 585, Jyeṣṭha su-di 5, Friday, Puṣya nakṣatra; this corresponds to either Tuesday, 9th May 528 A.D., or Saturday, 28th April 529 A.D. In the first case the nakṣatra was Puṣya, in the second Punarvasu. As the week-day comes out wrong in both cases, the date must be considered spurious. The nakṣatra carries less weight, because for every day of the lunar year the choice generally lies between three nakṣatras only which may be ascertained beforehand.

A full statement of all particulars about Haribhadra's works, their commentators and the latters' dates is furnished by Muni Kalyāṇavijaya in the preface (granthakāra-paricaya) to his edition of Haribhadra's Dharmasamgrahiṇī, Devendra Lālbhāi's Jainapustakoddhāra No. 42, Bombay, 1918.

5 चोहसीए चित्तस्य किण्ड्यक्लिम् i. e. Caitra ba-di 14. This date is interesting from the point of view of the calendar. As the Caitrādi-year invariably begins with the Suklapakṣa of Caitra, the date in question would seem to be recorded according to the pūrnimānta scheme in which the dark fortnight precedes the bright one. But as Kielhorn (Ind. Ant. 1896 p. 271 f) has shown from dates in inscriptions that in connection with Saka years almost always amānta months are used, the primā faciē interpretation of our date becomes extremely doubtful. In the year under consideration however there was an adhika Caitra which precedes the nija month; therefore in this case adhika Caitra ba-di 14 is the last day but one of the preceding year, if the year began with nija Caitra, as it ought to do, since the new moon initiating true Caitra immediately preceded by Meṣasamkrānti. I, therefore, believe that Swamikannu Pillai's assertion (Indian Ephemeris Vol. I, part I, p. 65), "when there is an adhika Caitra that begins the year", applies only to modern usage.

his work Uddyotana mentions Haribhadra as his teacher in philosophy, praising him as the author of a great many books; the latter statement puts it beyond doubt that the great Haribhadra is the person intended. The first who rightly understood the passage in question and recognised its chronological bearing, was Munirāj Shrī Jinavijaya. In his article "The date of Haribhadrasūri," read at the First Oriental Conference, November 1919, Poona, and published under the title "S'rī Haribhadrācāryasya Samayanirnayah" in the Jaina Sāhityasams'odhaka Granthamālā, Poona, he discusses the whole question, examines the evidence, and puts his case in the clearest light. The following remarks are chiefly based on his paper.

We cannot make out from Uddyotana's remark whether Haribhadra was still alive or not, when it was written; some twenty or thirty years before that date, however, he must have been actually teaching Uddyotana. We may, therefore, take that epoch, say, 750 A.D. or later, as the time of his literary activity, which considering the extraordinary number of prakaranas he wrote must have extended over twenty years at least. He quotes many authors, Brahmanical, Buddhist, and Jaina; a list of them containing thirty names has been drawn up by Jinavijaya, l. c., p. 11. From among them the following may be mentioned as interesting from a chronological point of view: Dignāga, Dharmakīrti, Bhartrhari (author of the Vākyapadīya, about 650 A. D.), and Kumārila. Haribhadra quotes, in his Vivarana of the Nandīsūtra, several passages from the Cūrni of that Sūtra by Jinadāsagani-mahattara without mentioning his name. The Cumi was finished in the S'aka-year 598=677 A.D. To about the same time belongs Siddhasenadivākara whom Haribhadra quotes; for he uses, no doubt. Dharmakirti,2 though he does not name him. We thus see that Haribhadra quoted many of the celebrities who flourished in the century preceding his own. On the other hand he does not quote S'ankara who rose so high above all his contemporaries that Haribhadra could not have ignored him if he had lived at or after his time. We, therefore, conclude that the tradition of S'ankara's school is right, or at least not far wrong, in placing his life in 788-820 A. D. Nor does Haribhadra, as Jinavijaya states (l. c., p. 13), discuss the Māyāvāda. He knows the Advaitavāda, and refutes two or three different branches of it in his S'āstravārttāsamuccava VIII, 1 ff,3 but none of them can be identified with the Māyāvāda.

² Dharmakīrti qualifies pratyaksa as abhrānta (and Dharmottara expressly says bhrāntam hy anumānam while Siddhasenadivākara in Nyāyāvatāra 5 ff claims abhrāntatā for pratyaksa as well as anumāna; similarly he extends the distinction of svārtha and parārtha, which properly applies to anumāna only, to pratyaksa also, ibidem 12 f. Apparently he thought to improve on Dharmakīrti by a wholesale generalisation of nice distinctions! He is different from Siddhasenagaņi the author of the Tattvārtha-vṛtti, because the latter quotes ad. II 25 from Haribhadra's commentary on the Nandīsūtra, see Kalyāṇavijaya, l. c., p. 29; Haribhadra, therefore, intervenes between both Siddhasenas. It may be mentioned that the younger one quotes ad. I, 10 a verse by Ārya-Siddhasena, who may or may not be Siddhasena-divākara.

This fact is of considerable interest, since it proves that before S'ankara the Māyāvāda was practically unknown outside of the circles of Aupaniṣadas; for it had already been established by Gauḍapāda, the guru of S'ankara's guru. It is not the intrinsic value of a system, or the originality of its teachings, that secured it notoriety throughout India, unless a great author and debator takes it up, systematically developes it in every detail, and successfully upholds it against all opponents. His fame then outshines that of the original thinker whose merit was apt to be overlooked.¹

2. Haribhadra's Life.

We know very little about Haribhadra from himself; all that he chooses to tell us is contained in the subscriptions to his numerous works. From them we collect the following information: (1) he obeyed the command of Jinabhaṭa, an ācārya of the Sitāmbaras (S'vetāmbaras); (2) he was the pupil of Ācārya Jinadatta, an ornament of the Vidyādhara kula (gaccha); (3) he was a spiritual son of the nun Yākinīmahattarā².

Some more facts are directly manifested by the works of Haribhadra: (4) the use, in the last verse of most of his works, of the word viraha, which may have reference to some event in his life; (5) his intimate knowledge not only of Jainism, but also of the teachings of the heterodox systems, evinced in his Anekāntajayapatākā and his Ṭikā of this work, as well as by his writing a commentary on Dignāga's Nyāyapraves'a; (6) his writing a great number of works.

It goes without saying that the contemporaries of Haribhadra knew a great deal more about his life than is contained in the above six items, but it is equally true that in oral tradition sober history is apt to be gradually changed into legend, a strange mixture of facts and fiction, which we can separate from each other with some degree of plausibility only in the simplest cases. Occasionally, however, tradition has stories of an entirely fictitious kind and originally unconnected with its hero. Thus, in the case in hand, curiosity was naturally excited, by point (4), to satisfy which a tale full of miraculous and wholly incredible incidents is added in the legendary life of Haribhadra; it exceeds in length all remaining parts of the legends taken together; but no reference to it is made in the oldest accounts.

Before analysing the traditions about Haribhadra's life, I enumerate the sources from which it is known.

- (a) A short paragraph at the end of Municandra's Tikā of Haribhadra's Upades'a-padāni; this Tikā was finished in Vikrama Saṃvat 1174=1118 A. D.; the passage in question has been printed by Kalyāṇavijaya l. c. p. 5a and Jinavijaya l. c. p. 4, note 14.
- (b) Eight gāthās (52-59) in Jinadatta's Gaṇadharasārdhas'ataka, written between Saṃvat 1169 and 1211=1112—1154 A. D. The text is edited in A. Weber, Verzeichniss der Sanskrit-und Prākrit-Handschriften, II p. 982 f.
- (c) The ninth S'riga of Prabhācandra's Prabhāvakacarita, finished Saṃvat 1334=1278 A. D. (the name of the author is wrongly given as Candraprabha on the title of the N. S. edition, 1909).
 - 1 Thus the Dhvani-theory also seems to have been ignored until Anandavardhana composed the Dhvanyāloka, the commentary on the original treatise in Kārikās by an unknown author, and thereby brought this theory to such prominence, that nearly all later writers on Alamkāra have adopted it. I am, therefore, also persuaded that nihilistic and idealistic teachings which did exist in early Buddhism passed unnoticed by, and did not provoke the opposition, of Brahmanical philosophers until Nāgārjuna did for the Śūnyavāda and Vasubandhu for the Vijñānavāda, what long after them Śańkara has done for the Māyāvāda.

2 All the details stated above are given in the subscription of the Śiṣyahitā, his Ṭīkā of the Āvaṣyakasūtra; in other places only one or other detail is mentioned.

- (d) Rājas'ekhara's Prabandhakos'a, written in samvat 1405=1349 A. D. I know only some extracts of this work given by Kalyāṇavijaya l. c. p. 8a, 24a.
- (e) Sumatigani's Vrtti of the Gaṇadharasārdha-s'ataka (see b) finished saṃvat $1295\!=\!1239$ A. D., occasionally referred to by Kalyāṇavijaya. An abridgement of Sumatigaṇi's narrative is given in the Laghuvṛtti of Sarvarājagaṇi, see A. Weber, l. c. p. 988.
- (f) Kathāvalī of Bhadres'vara, date unknown; mentioned by Jinavijaya and not otherwise known to me.

I shall now discuss some traditions about particulars of Haribhadra's life which may be regarded as substantially true.

The birth place of Haribhadra was, according to a, c, d, e, Citrakuta, the modern The ancient fort on the crest of the hill was the capital of Mewar from about the 7th century till 1569 when the seat of government was moved to Udaipur. Haribhadra probably lived in Chitor up to his initiation. But the scene of his later life as a monk seems to have been chiefly the neighbouring parts of Rajputana and the kingdom of Guzerat. In that country, he became the teacher of Uddyotana2. Another indication of Haribhadra's activity in Guzerat is furnished by the annals of Jaina families; for according to Kalyānavijaya (l. c. p. 7b) they assert that Haribhadra organised the clan of the Porevals (Poruvāda, Prāgvāṭa) and converted them to Jainism. Now we learn from the Nemināhacariu³ that the Poreval clan originated in S'rīmāla,4 that a warlike member of this clan Nimaya, was induced by Vanarāja (746-806 A. D.) to settle in his new capital Aņahillapāṭaka, and that he there erected a temple of Rsabha for the Vidyadhara-gaccha. Since Haribhadra, the organiser of the Poreval clan, belonged to the Vidyādharagaccha, it is likely that that clan owed some sort of allegiance to that gaccha, whereof the statement in the Neminahacariu seems to furnish a proof. Although Haribhadra may have lived for the greater part of his life in Guzerat and the adjoining States of Rajputana, yet his wanderings as a Yati probably extended to far distant parts of India. Some hints about his knowledge of India may be gathered from the Samarāiccakahā. In this regard it is significant, that he does not lay the scene of any of his tales in one of the renowned towns of the Deccan or Southern India,6 but all towns that can be identified are situated in Northern India, from Hastinapura to Tamralipta. He evinces a more intimate acquaintance with Eastern India between Ayodhya

- 1 The phrase in e: S'rīcitrakūṭācalacūlānivāsino clearly refers to the ancient town on the hill.
- 2 The verses 4 and 6 in the passage quoted from the Kuvalayamālā by Jinavijaya (1. c. p. 15) prove that Uddyotana belonged to a line of yatis that flourished in Guzerat.

- 5 For he calls his teacher Jinadatta an ornament of the Vidyadharagaccha. According to the Harshanandanagani (1616 A. D.) he was a member of Vrddhagaccha, see Kalyanavijaya. 1. c. p. 11b.

and Campā; in these countries Buddhism was still flourishing, and it is, therefore, possible that Haribhadra there acquired his accurate knowledge of Buddhist philosophy, especially as taught by Dignāga and Dharmakīrti.

That Haribhadra was a Brahman by caste is stated in e¹ and implied in c, where he is said to have been the purchita of King Jitari.2 Though there is no such statement in a and b, I have no doubt that it is true. For the learning peculiar to Haribhadra, apart from his comprehensive knowledge of Jaina Lore, is of such a kind as was natural with a Brahman, but quite exceptional in any other case, before Jain literature had received a new impulse from brahmanical science. Municandra (e) truly describes Haribhadra as one 'who had studied the eight grammarians, and was the leader of those whose understanding is hardened by the discussions connected with all philosophical systems.' It is chiefly due to Haribhadra, as will be explained in the next paragraph, that Sanskrit became the learned language of the S'vetambaras and replaced Prakrit in several departments of their literature; he would, however, not have had this influence unless he was a perfect master of Sanskrit, an accomplishment which required the customary training of the Brahman. And as regards his mastery in philosophical discussion conducted in Sanskrit it is such that his Anekāntajayapatākā with Tikā favourably compares with any philosophical work of the same age.³ It may be added that the story of Haribhadra's conversion, the main features of which are already contained in our oldest source (a), points also to the same conclusion, that he was a Brahman by caste.

Haribhadra by acknowledging the nun Yākinī as his spiritual mother (dharmato Yākinīmahattarāsūnu) unmistakably ascribes to her his conversion to the 'true faith', which may be regarded as a second birth. How his conversion was brought about, has been recorded by tradition which, in this regard, is probably substantially trustworthy. I shall first give an abstract of the narrative about this part of Haribhadra's life in the Prabhāvakacarita (IX, V. 4-47), and discuss it afterwards.

Haribhadra was purchita of King Jitāri in the town of Citrakūta. He was so proud of his knowledge, that he proclaimed that he would become the pupil of anyone whose proposition he could not understand, and this vow was engraved on a golden plate he wore on his belly (11). Once a mast elephant having got loose and causing great havoc in the streets, Haribhadra fled before him and made his escape by climbing on a Jain temple. Thence he perceived the image of a Tīrthakara whom he derided in a 'sloka (vapur eva tavā'caṣte, etc.) (18). On the next day when he went home about midnight, he heard an old nun reciting a gāthā⁴ (cakkidugam Haripanagam, etc.), which utterly baffled his understanding. He asked her to explain its meaning, but she referred him to her guru (27). So he went to see him on the next morning. Passing on his way by the same temple he pronounced the same s'loka (vapur eva tavā'caṣte) changing one word so that it redounded to a praise of Jina. There he saw Jinabhaṭasūri who promised to teach him after he had been initiated. Haribhadra consented, and acknowledged mahattarā Jākinī as his

² Apparently a fictitious name standing for Jitaśatru, the usual name of the king in countless legends and stories of the Jainas, but never met with, as far as I know, in any historical document, inscription etc. The name is absent in the list of Guhila kings of Mewād, see Mabel Duff, Chronology of India p. 282.

³ It is true that the Buddhists possessed many other older works of a similar description but the Buddhists had come into contact with Brahminical schools of philosophy at a much earlier time, and many of their great writers have notoriously been Brahmans by caste.

^{4.} This gatha occurs in the Avasyakaniryukti.

spiritual mother (42). He became so well versed in the sacred Lore of the Jainas, and his conduct was such that the guru appointed him his successor. Thus Haribhadra became a Yugapradhāna (47).

Now all essential points in this account are confirmed by Municandra in the short passage¹ referred to above, with the exception of the incident of the mast elephant (v. 12–18) and, as said before, of his being the purohita of King Jitāri. There the same gāthā and the s'loka are mentioned and the name of the guru is given as Jinabhadra² apparently by mistake for Jinabhata; some minor details which may be regarded as embellishments, are omitted. It is, therefore, clear that the tradition, on the whole, is old, and as there is nothing extravagant or incredible in it, we may regard it as coming very near the truth.

It remains to mention a curious notice in the Gaṇadharasārdhas'ataka v. 5f: 'Some, mis'ed by the similarity of the name, have erroneously asserted that Haribhadra was initiated and instructed by the Caityavāsins.' The Caityavāsins were those monks who abode in temples, while their opponents advocated the vasatinivāsa, i. e. the dwelling in the houses of laymen (paragrha). Both sections seem to have coexisted for some time and no separation to have taken place; S'īlānka³ is said to have been a Caityavāsin. But in the end the Caityavāsa seems to have become discredited, and Jines'varasūri, the founder of the Kharataragaccha in Saṃvat 1080=1024 A. D., established the vasatinivāsa, at least for his sect.

It is just what might be expected that at a time when the enmity between those two sections, or rather sects, was at its height, the Caityavāsins should have claimed the famous Haribhalra for one of their own, and their opponents should have repudiated their claim as null and void; but it is equally certain that if at Haribhadra's time the mode of the monks' lodging had already become an important point of controversy, there would have been no occasion to doubt which side of the question he espoused. The descriptions of monastic life in the Samarāicca Kahā illustrate the practice of monks in his days, or at least one he would approve of; according to it monks put up stay in a park near the town, where they were visited by the faithful and the curious. It is not said explicitly that they lodged there in a temple, but it seems to be excluded that Haribhadra supposed them to lodge in houses belonging to, or furnished by, laymen.

3. Haribhadra's Works.

Haribhadra's fame as a yugapradhāna chiefly rests on his literary activity for the sake of Jainism; he is one of the most fertile authors in Jaina Literature as regards not only the number of the works he wrote, but also the diversity of the subjects he treated. Jinavijaya (l. c. p. 3) enumerates 26 works of H. as the most renowned ones, of which 20 have been edited and Kalyāṇavijaya (l. c. p. 13a-19a) has drawn up a list of all his works, actually ¹ With it agrees the very short notice in the Laghuvrtti of the Ganadharasardhasataka v. 56 p. vi. It mentions besides the golden plate worn by H. on his belly.

² The same form of the name is given in the Laghuvitti mentioned in the last note.

³ In the Laghuvrtti v. 60. According to that source and to the Pattāvalī of the Kharataragaccha Śīlānka was a successor of Haribhadra; but that is impossible, since the date of his Ācārāṅgatīkā is said to be Śaka 798 = 872 A. D. or more than a century later than Haribhadra. According to the same source Śīlānka's successor was Uddyotanasūrī, whose successor was Vardhamānasūri, the teacher and predecessor of Jineśvarasūrī. These statements are, no doubt, arbitrary and entirely wrong, for Uddyotanasūrī who wrote his great poem in 779 A. D., cannot have been removed by one teacher only from Jinendrasūrī, who flourished more than two centuries later. Apparently there was no solid, if any, tradition concerning the period which preceded the foundation of the Kharataragaccha.

preserved or known from quotations only; his list contains 88 entries. Great as this number is, still it would be but a small fraction of the total of his writings if tradition might be credited, which ascribes to him the composition of 1, 400 prakaranas.¹ This tradition is found already in our oldest sources of H.'s life (a and b), and it can be traced further back to 1068 A. D., being contained in Abhayadeva's Ṭikā on H.'s Pañcās'aka finished in that year. Now it is altogether incredible that the Jainas should have been so extremely careless in handing down the works of their famous author that a few centuries after his death even the titles of the great majority of them should have been forgotten, seeing that two works which he left unfinished, viz., Tattvārtha-laghuvṛtti and Piṇḍa-niryukti have nevertheless been preserved. Unless, therefore, the number 1,400 be a mere hyperbole without any special meaning, we must assume that in this connection prakarana does not denote as usually a separate systematic treatise, but is used in a more restricted sense so that the Pañcā'saka contains 50 prakaranas, Aṣṭaka 32, Ṣoḍas'aka 16, etc., but on what principle in other cases his books were split into a great number of prakaranas it is impossible to say.

Haribhadra wrote in Sanskrit and Prākrit both in verse and in prose, mostly of course in illustration of Jaina doctrines. Two sides of his literary activity deserve special notice, his commenting on canonical works in Sanskrit, and his discussing with an intimate knowledge, the doctrines of Brahmans and Buddhists.

The old commentaries on the canonical books, the Niryuktis, Cūrņis and old Bhāṣyas were written in Prākrit throughout.¹ As already mentioned (above p. iii) Jinadāṣagaṇi's Cūrṇi on the Nandīsūtra was finished in 677 A, D., it is, of course, written in Prākrit. Haribhadra composed a commentary on the same Sūtra, making use of the work of his predecessor; but he wrote it in Sanskrit, as well as his remaining commentaries on Sūtras. As we know of no older Sanskrit commentary on any Sūtra in S'vetāmbara Literature, it is very probable that the innovation was due to Haribhadra; at least the new practice was firmly established by him, though it was further developed in the sequel. For according to Prof. Leumann (l. c. p. 582) Haribhadra commented on the text in Sanskrit but retained the kathānakas and certain other parts of the Cūrṇi in the original Prākrit; while S'īlānka who flourished more than a century later, translates such passages also into Sanskrit.

Haribhadra is emphatically the author of prakaranas in the technical meaning of the word; a prakarana is a systematic treatise in which the subject is exposed in a scientific form, unlike the unsystematic, either diffuse or episodical, treatment of subjects in canonical books; it may be in Prākrit, but as a rule it is in Sanskrit. This way of writing originated, of course, with the Brahmans in whose literature the models of it are to be found. The first instance of it in Jaina Literature is Umāsvāti's (or Umāsvāmin's) Tattvārthādhigamasūtra, which is claimed as their own by both S'vetāmbaras and Digambaras. The early literature of the latter, who do not recognise the existent Siddhanta, consists largely in the prakaranas both in Prākrit and Sanskrit. But the first undoubtedly S'vetāmbara author of prakaraṇas some of whose works have come down to us, is Siddhasena-divākara. Haribhadra, who is removed from him, as shown above p. x., by two or three generations at the utmost, raised this branch of S'vetāmbara Literature to a high degree of perfection. Though a few of these books of his are in Prākrit, the majority of them are in Sanskrit; they contain besides an exposition of the Jaina tenets, concise information about, and discussions or refutations of, the doctrines of opposite schools, Brahmanical and Buddhist. In this connection one of Haribhadra's works, though not a prakarana, has a peculiar interest, viz, his commentary on Dignāga's Nyāyapraves'a. Siddhasena-divākara had written a Nyāyāvatāra which unmistakably presupposes Dharmakirti's Nyāyabindu¹ apparently intending to provide the Jainas with a manual of Logics. But it is decidedly inferior to the masterly work of Dharmakirti which it was designed to supersede; nor had it any lasting success. Haribhadra, however, instead of attempting to find a logical school of the Jainas, induced them, by commenting on Dignāga, to study the original works of Buddhist Logicians. He apparently appreciated their paramount importance, though he controverted, at great length, some logical propositions of Dharmakirti in his Anekāntajayapatākā. The interest of the Jainas in Buddhist Logics continued long after his time; we owe to it the preservation of Dharmakirti's Nyāyabindu and Dharmottara's Nyāyabindutīkā in the original Sanskrit; for the oldest manuscripts of these works and of a fragment of a commentary on the latter come from Jaina bhandārs.

The endeavours of great teachers like Siddhasena-divākara and Haribhadra to raise the S'vetāmbaras to the high level of Indian mental culture were brought to their conclusion by Hemacandra who provided them with admirable text books of the principal Indian sciences besides such standard works as more directly concerned their own creed. Thus the S'vetāmbaras, who for many centuries seem to have remained in a comparative obscurity as an exclusive sect, emerged to notoriety, probably about the seventh century, till at last they became, in Guzerat and the adjoining countries, the most influential religious community, and could even, under Kumārapāla, be called the established church of the kingdom.

But to return to the works of Haribhadra, it remains to be noticed that he usually employs, in the last verse of them, the word viraha which is known as his "mark". Kalyāṇavijaya (l. c. p. 20a ff) quotes in full the passages where this mark occurs. As exceptions he mentions (p. 12b.) the commentaries on the Das'avaikālika, Āvas'yaka Prajñāpaṇā-sūtras, 'etc.' and Samarādityakathā, Saddars'anasamuccaya, Lokatattvanirṇaya 'etc.' It is, however, doubtful, whether the Samarādityakathā is an exception to the rule, since three Mss. read the word viraha in the last verse. (See the footnote to the passage in question). According to the legend the 'mark' viraha refers to Haribhadra's loss of his nephews and pupils Hamsa and Paramahamsa whom, however, he does not mention anywhere in his writings as far as I know. There may be some truth in this report; but out of the simple fact, if fact it was, there grew a long story full of miraculous incidents, which as I have already said above, forms the greater part of the legendary life of Haribhadra. I subjoin an abstract of it as given in the Prabhāvakacarita. (IX 48-206).

His sister's sons Hamsa and Paramahamsa, who had left their father's house in disgust, became his pupils and were instructed by him in logic. They desired to go to a Buddhist town in order to learn their Sastra, but Haribhadra foreseeing some disaster entreated them not to go; nevertheless they insisted on it and went, in disguise, to the Buddhist town, where they were instructed by a Buddhist muni. Having learnt the objection raised by the Buddhists against Jainism, they wrote a clever refutation of them on some leaves. A blast of wind carried the leaves away and they were brought to the Buddhist muni, who thus became aware of the presence of some Jaina Yati amongst his pupils. In order to find him out, he had the image of a Jina placed on the gateway so that all must trample on it on entering. But the two brothers painted with chalk the sacred thread on the breast of the image, and then they were not afraid to put their feet on it. Now the Buddhist muni employed another trick. All pupils were confined in an upper room and watches were placed with them; and when they were asleep he caused a number of jars to be rolled down from the upper storey. The sleepers started up in terror and invoked their istadevatās. The two brothers invoking the Jina, were thus found out; but they took a couple of umbrellas and spreading them jumped out of the window. They reached the ground without hurt or injury and fled at great speed. Buddhist soldiers pursued them, When they were approaching them.

Hamsa advised his brother to take refuge with Sūrapāla, king of a nearby town, who would give him protection; he then fought his enemies of whom he killed a great many, but at last he fell and died. (94.). Paramahamsa went to Surapala who granted him his protection. Soon after the host of pursuers arrived and demanded the delivery of their enemy. The king, however, did not give up his protege, but proposed that a disputation should be held, and if their speaker should vanquish him, he might do with him as is proper in such cases. The Buddhist agreed under the condition that their opponent should remain behind a curtain, because they would not look at the face of one so infamous. The ensuing disputation was conducted, on the side of the Buddhists, by their S'asanadevata, who was invisible and spoke from the mouth of a pitcher. When the disputation had gone on for some days Paramahamsa despaired and invoked Amba, the S'asanadevata of his gana. She told him, who had, all the time, spoken against him, and advised him how to act in the disputation. He was thus enabled to reduce his opponents to silence; then lifting the curtain he smashed the pitcher and charged the opponent with fraudulent behaviour. The king, conscious of the sinister intention of the Buddhists, said to them, he who after vanquishing me in battle will take hold of him, may do so without fault.' Then he gave Paramahamsa a wink, who guessing his meaning fled as quick as possible; he was, however, closely pursued by horsemen whom he eluded by the following trick. Seeing a washerman at work he persuaded him to get away as a sudden attack was coming¹, and he himself resumed his work. When a horsemen enquired of him whether he had seen someone on that road, he pointed out the washerman at a great distance. The soldiers made the washerman prisoner and then returned. Paramahamsa having thus put off his pursuers proceeded in his journey and after a few days reached Citrakūta where he met Haribhadra. He told him what he and Hamsa had done; but when he had related his brother's death, he was so overcome with grief that his heart burst and died. (122). Haribhadra was deeply afflicted by the loss of his nephews and pupils. He conceived an intense hatred of the Buddhists and resolved to destroy them. (133). He went to Surapala and told him his intention. Confident that Haribhadra would vanquish his opponents the King sent a messenger to the town of the Buddhists and persuaded their leader to sign a contract making it binding on him who should be vanquished in disputation, to plunge into a cauldron filled with boiling oil. (157.). The ensuing disputation turned on the Buddhist proposition of the impermanence of everything existent. Not being able to answer Haribhadra's arguments, the Buddhists had to undergo the punishment agreed upon. Some more Buddhist disputants suffered the same death. (168). The Buddhists reviled the Goddess Tara for having caused their defeat by deserting them; but the goddess explained that it was the just punishment for their having killed Hamsa and Paramahamsa. (179).

Jinabhata, who had heard of Haribhadra's cruel revenge, sent him, through two bhiksus, the three gāthās which contain the argument of the Samarādityakāthā (see p. 6, l. 2 ff). Haribhadra guessed his meaning; just as Agnis'arman's hatred had lasted through nine births, so his enmity towards the Buddhists would have the most disastrous consequences for him. He, therefore, took leave of the king and went to his guru; full of contrition he asked his forgiveness and did severe penance as ordered by him. (196). The goddess Ambā rebuked him for still grieving at his bereavement; it was due to his Karma that he left no successors in his line of teachers; his books would stand in their stead. (203). He composed the Samarādityakathā and according to the three gāthās sent him by his guru, and wrote 1,400 prakaranas; they all exhibit the mark viraha in remembrance of his two nephews. (206).

The narrative in the Prabhāvakacarita is written to say the least, in a most unconventional style of poetry, rendered frequently unintelligible by the bad preservation of the text. It seems to be based on a popular story, perhaps on a kind of Rās. We are acquainted with another version of the same subject, similar on the whole but differing in many details, from an abstract, or rather skeleton of an abstract in Rājas'ekhara's Kathākos'a (1350 A. D.), the greater part of which has been given by Kalyāṇavijaya (l. c. p. 8b.). According to this account:

Hamsa and Paramahamsa made three strokes on the throat of the image of Jina, thereby changing it into one of Buddha. But remarking that the Buddhist guru regarded them with suspicion they pretended to be ill and escaped taking with them a Buddhist relic (kapālikā or karparikā). To recover the relic the king sent a troop of soldiers after them; but as H. and P. were sahasrayodhins¹, they defeated them. Now the king despatched a large army, with which H. fought, while P. fled with the relic. H. was at last overcome by the great number of his enemies, who cut off his head and brought it to the King. But the guru insisted on recovering the relic. Therefore soldiers went in search of Paramahamsa. They discovered him sleeping before the walls of Citrakūṭa the gates of which were closed, and cut off his head. Haribhadra finding the corpse of his pupil and nephew, fell into a tremendous rage. He filled cauldrons with boiling oil and attracted by charm 1,440 Bauddhas through the air to be made a sacrifice of.² His guru sent him the three gāṭhās. Haribhadra's wrath was appeased, and he composed 1,440 granthas in atonement of his passion and sins.

A comparison of this version of the story with the preceding one is of interest for those who investigate the growth of popular tales; but a critical inquirer, will, no doubt, reject both alike as sources for the history of Haribhadra's life. Even that he had two nephews and pupils named Hamsa and Paramahamsa who perished in an attempt at learning by stealth the doctrines of the Buddhists, statements which form the foundation of the legend and are by no means incredible in themselves, must be accepted with the utmost reserve. The legendary account of the circumstances which led to Haribhadra's composing the Samarāiccakahā will be discussed in the next paragraph.

The rest of the account in the Prabhavākacarita contains some details not un worthy of remark. I, therefore, add an abstract of the concluding part of the 9th s'riga of that work (v. 206-221).

Haribhadra diverted the layman Kārpāsika from his partiality for the Bhārata and Itihāsa by telling him the five stories of rogues³ (211), and won him over to the Jaina faith. He ordered him to make an edition of his works and to distribute them among the yatis (217). He caused other people to construct 84 temples on one platform (ekapūthe), 218. He also produced the Mahānis'īthasūtra from a decaying manuscript, (219). Ending his life by anas'ana he ascended to heaven (221).

¹ There is an allusion to their drstimelapaka preceding the combat, the meaning of which is not clear.

² This particular is apparently an adaptation of Janamejaya's snake-sacrifice in Mahābhārata, I, adhy. 51ff.

³ This apparently refers to his Prākrit Kāvya Dhūrtākhyānam.

THE DHŪRTĀKHYĀNA: A CRITICAL STUDY

BY

Dr. A. N. UPADHYE, M. A., D. Litt.

1. The Prakrit Text

THE DHURTAKHYANA of Haribhadrasūri, whose career is to be assigned to the middle of 8th century A. D., is a typical literary work that has a special significance in Indian literature. It had already attracted the attention of E. Leumann some forty years back; and it is through him that N. Mironow could refer to some parallel stories in his dissertation on the Dharmaparīkṣā of Amitagati. Some Gujarāti and Hindī renderings of Dhū, have appeared in India, but they were primarily concerned with the contents and not with the Prākrit text of that work.

This unique work, in Prākrit, is now brought out for the first time in this Singhi Jain Series having been critically edited by Ācārya Śrī Jinavijayji. Its Sanskrit version by Sanghatilaka and an Old-Gujarāti prose rendering by an unknown writer have also been included in this edition to facilitate its comparative study.

The Prākrit text, presented here, is based on three MSS., A, B, and C.³ They do not bear any dates, but A and B, as described by the learned editor in his Preface, look quite old; and they may be assigned to 16th century A. D. C is quite modern and just a copy of A prepared by an inexperienced scribe; consequently the readings of C are not noted. A and B are sufficiently independent and do show some variants noted in the foot-notes. Confusion in numbering the verses is seen in both. B looks not only older but is also more accurate than A. The MS. A shows necessarily y-śruti for the udvṛtta vowel (as I surmise, irrespective of the preceding vowel); while B very often puts a (or ā) for the lost consonant: this possibly means that B is following the more strict rule about y-śruti specified by Hemacandra in his Commentary,⁴ and its so-called accuracy perhaps betrays the hand of some revisionist or copyist possessing a thorough mastery over Hemacandra's Prākrit grammar.

² Die Dharmaparīkṣā des Amitagati, Leipzig 1903.

⁴ See Siddha-Hemacandra, VIII. i. 180.

These two Mss., A and B, do not show any recensions as such. If B omits a verse (V. 26) and A repeats some line (V. 47), this is due just to scribal lapse. The concluding verse (V. 125) cannot belong to Haribhadra. His composition ends with V. 124 which mentions bhava-viraha, Haribhadra's distinguishing mark; and the contents of the following verse do betray that it is composed by some zealous follower of Haribhadra. Certain portions of the Prākrit text are not specifically covered by the Sanskrit (III. 83b, 84; V. 115-18) and Gujarāti versions (III. 83-84; V. 111) which closely follow it; but looking to the context etc., this cannot be a conclusive proof to suspect those portions as later additions in Haribhadra's text.

At the kind request of Ācārya Śrī Jinavijayji, I have attempted below a study of this important literary work. Before subjecting its different aspects to a critical scrutiny, it would be proper to give a short outline of the stories occurring in this work.

2. Summary of the Contents

I

Adjacent to the prosperous town of Ujjaini, there was a fine park of luxuriant vegetation with a garden-house. During their wanderings there arrived hundreds of confirmed rogues who had acquired specific proficiency in the tricks of their trade. They had five leaders: Mūlaśrī, Kandarīka, Elāṣādha, Śaśa and Khandapana.1 Every one of the first four had five hundred male cheats and Khandapana had an equal number of female cheats, as their retinue. Mulasrī was their foremost chief. During the height of rainy season, when it was heavily pouring all over the week and when it was not possible to move about, all the rogues, shivering and hungry, began to deliberate as to who would give them a feast for the day. Mūladeva² stipulated thus: 'Every one should address the chamber of cheats about what one had heard or experienced; and he who proves it to be an incredible lie should give food and drink to the gathering of rogues. But he who confirms the same by quoting parallels from various scriptures like the Purāna, Bhārata and Rāmāyana and convinces the audience, is not to give anything; and he would be made the lord of rogues.' They all agreed to this and requested) Muladeva to narrate his experience (I. 1-16).

Mūladeva said: "I shall tell you what I experienced as a youth. Yearning for prosperity, I went to the abode of Īśvara to receive the stream of Gangā on my head. As I was travelling with a gourd-kettle and umbrella in hand, a mad wild-elephant rushed at me like a moving mountain. I trembled with fear; I saw no shelter and escape; so I lept into the gourd-kettle that my life might be saved. The elephant was infuriated and followed me into the gourd-kettle where I deceived it by hide-and-seek for a period of six months.

² Müladeva and Mülasrī are alternative names.

At last I escaped through the spout of the gourd-kettle; but when the elephant also followed me, its tail-hair was caught in the spout-hole. I approached, however, the ocean-like river Gangā, crossed the rushing stream, and reached the abode of Īśvara. Standing hunger and thirst, I received the stream of Gangā on my head for six months. Thence I came to Ujjainī and met you all here. If you accept all this as true, confirm it by evidence; if you think this to be a lie, well, give us a feast." Kandarīka observed that one who has read Bhārata, Purāṇas and Rāmāyaṇa would not call this a lie (I. 17-34).

Kandarīka continued: "What we hear in the Bhārata and Purāna is reliable, therefore your experience also is true. 1) It is said that the Vipras are born from the mouth, the Ksatriyas from the arms, Vaisyas from the thighs and Sudras from the feet of Brahman: that means the entire population could be accommodated in Brahman's body. 2) Umā could lead a married life with İśvara whose male organ could not be measured even by Brahman and Vișnu. 3) The saint Vyāsa has narrated thus in the Bhārata: 'The chief queen of Virāta king had no progeny. She propitiated a certain saint who asked her to go to the bamboo-bower and eat the dish whereby she would have one hundred children. She did so and went home. After some time there arrived the saint Gāgali¹ and sat practising austerities under the bamboo-grove. He glanced passionately at the nude nymphs bathing in the lake; and out of his first drop of semen there was born Kīcaka, as mighty as elephant. Thus were generated one hundred Kīcakas who were all first accommodated in bamboos and who were later received by the queen.' 4) Gangā was deluded by Hara in his matted hair for one thousand years. 5) Visnu, the creator of the world, was practising penance on the bed of ocean; the lotus-seated Brahman, with staff and gourd in hand, came out of the navel of Vișnu, but the lotus was caught stuck there. 6) It is narrated in the Bhārata that Brahman began practising penance for thousand years; and the jealous gods wanted to frustrate his efforts. Indra counselled thus: 'Woman has been a mighty temptress, and none except Mahāvīra could stand the arrows of Madana. Seeing the limbs of Umā, Paśupati became passionate even at the sacred hour of marriage; and Dronacarya was generated from the semen-drop fallen in a pot. Similarly eminent personalities like Gautama, Vasistha,2 Pārāsara, Jamadagni, Kāsyapa, Agastya, Indra, Hara, Hari, etc. are all victims of cupid. So Tilottamā should be sent to tempt Brahman; and thus his penance would be destroyed.' Accordingly Tilottamā approached Brahman in a beautiful dress and began to dance before him like a Campaka flower. When Brahman began to gaze at her, she stood dancing by his right side. With a passionate craze for her Brahman developed four faces, as she shifted herself in different directions. When she jumped up, he had on his head a fifth face; but it was plucked by Rudra. Brahman was very much irritated and infuriated. From the drop of perspiration on his forehead was born Svedakundalin¹ who, at Brahman's order, overthrew Śamkara (= Rudra = Iśvara = Hara) who ran to Viṣṇu for alms while the latter was practising penance in the Badarikāśrama. Viṣṇu opened the vein on his forehead, but the skull of Brahman, which Iśvara held, could not be filled. When Iśvara dipped his finger in the blood, a man Raktakundalin by name, was generated. At Rudra's behest Raktakundalin fought against Svedakundalin. Their long battle was declared drawn by the gods; one was given in charge of the Sun and the other in charge of Indra so that they might continue their fight in the Bhārata war. When the Sun was enamoured by Kunti's beauty and cohabited with her, Karṇa was conceived by her and delivered through the ear. 7) It has been narrated in the Rāmāyaṇa that Pavanasuta, a monkey, crossed the ocean by his arms at the order of Rāghava and reached Lankā. 8) For the benefit of the world, Gangā was invited from the heaven by gods; and her stream was received on the head by Iśvara for thousands of years.

If the above events are acceptable, then that you were accommodated with the elephant in the gourd-kettle (Nos. 1-3)², that you deluded it for six months (No. 4), that its tail-hair was stuck in the spout (No. 5), that you could escape through the spout (No. 6), that you crossed Gangā (No. 7), and that you received her stream on your head (No. 8) are all quite true. You are a good man endowed with wisdom and fame." (I. 35-93).

II

Being requested by Mūlaśrī, Kandarīka began to narrate his experiences: "Naughty as I was in my boyhood, my parents drove me out of the house. I reached a rich village on the frontier. There a Yakşa, Kamaladala by name, lived under the Vata tree; he possessed miraculous powers; and he bestowed boons on women. A fair was held in his honour, and people gathered together in gallant dress. I joined the fair, paid respects to the deity, and attended the horse-play. All of a sudden there was an attack from a well-equipped party of robbers; consequently one and all from the fair, even the horses, entered into a cucumber; the sports continued therein; and the party of robbers returned saying that the village had disappeared. There arrived a flock of animals; a goat swallowed that cucumber; a boa gulped that goat; and a crane flew up to the top of the Vata tree, after eating up the boa. A king was camping under that tree. Mistaking the crane's leg for a banyanshoot, a mad elephant was tied to it by the driver. When the crane took up its leg, the elephant was lifted up; and the driver raised a cry that some one snatched away his animal. Skilled archers rushed forth and shot the crane

¹ Both Sanskrit and Gujarāti Texts read Sita— or Śveta-kundalin which has no etymological justification. S'veta or sita is being used to balance against rakta, but we have to remember that one is born from sveda and the other from rakta.

² In round brackets are given the numbers of legends, noted above, in the light of which particular remarks are said to be true.

dead. It fell lifeless on the earth like a mountain-peak. At the king's order, its stomach was opened; and vivisection was continued on the inner contents, till at last all the people, horses, etc. came out like a swarm of moths from a nest. They went to their respective places, and I went home. I have myself experienced all this; well, if you disbelieve, give us a feast." (II. 1-25).

Elāṣāḍha, who had studied Purāṇa, Bhārata, etc., at once said that whatever Kandarika described was quite believable without any doubt. He continued to confirm the same: "1) According to the Visnupurana, in the beginning, when the five elements had not come into existence, there was the extensive ocean on the waves of which rolled an egg for a long time. It broke into two halves; and out of one half came this earth. Thus all the living beings, gods, men, beasts, etc. were found accommodated in that egg. Aranya-parvan, Markandeya has narrated his experience to Dharmaputra thus: 'At the time of universal deluge, when there was water everywhere and the world was devoid of living habitation, an extensive and lofty Vata tree was seen. A handsome boy was seated on a bed which was spread on its branches. saint Mārkandeya stretched his arms to receive the boy lest he might succumb to the floods. He visualised in the stomach of that boy the whole world with its mountains and forests. He entered the stomach and dwelt there for one thousand years, but could not reach its end: so he came out at last. Thus a child's stomach could contain the whole world.' 3) Devaki's waist was so slender. that it could be caught in a fist; still Kesava dwelt in her womb; and his stomach contained the earth with its mountains, forests, etc. 4) Without being suffocated to death, all the people on the earth lived comfortably in the stomach of Vāsudeva and continued their activities such as agriculture, trade, battle, There is no doubt that the world was contained in Keśava's festivals, etc. stomach. Once Brahman claimed that he is the creator (kartā), because the four Varnas emerged from his mouth, arms, thighs and feet; but Keśava retorted that his claim was ridiculous and that he (Brahman) was as good as his boy. Keśava continued that the earth and sky formed the cavity, the mountains his jaws and the ocean his tongue; if necessary, Brahman should enter his stomach and see that the whole world was there. Keśava further added that Brahman was ungratefully talking thus when he too was born from his navel. 5) At the time of Draupadi's self-choice, it is reported that the mighty bow of Drupada was presided over by deities. Drupada announced that he who strung his bow and shot the specified target would win the hand of Draupadi. Many kings failed to string it. That mighty Sisupala was nearly successful, but Kṛṣṇa frustrated his attempt by putting into the bow some additional weight in the form of elephants, mountains, planets, etc. The bow was so heavy that even the earth could not bear the load. Arjuna, however, took the aid of Bhīma's palm for its support, ably strung the bow, and successfully hit the target.

Draupadī was given to him in marriage. Thus the bow could contain mountains, planets, etc. 6) We hear in the Rāmāyaṇa that Jaṭāyu, the vulture, fought with his wings against Rāvaṇa who cut his wings in the fight; and when Jaṭāyu fell on the ground, he appeared as big as Mandara mountain. Sītā blessed him that his wings would be restored after meeting the messenger of Rāma. Hanumat was sent by Rāma in search of Sītā; and he mistook for a mountain that body of Jāṭāyu who gave him the necessary information about her. Jaṭāyu got the wings and flew to the heaven. So it means that a vulture can be as big as the Mandara mountain.

If the above events are true, then quite reliable are the incidents that the whole village could be accommodated in a cucumber (Nos. 1-3), that all the people could come out of it with their lives safe (No. 4), that a crane could contain all that (No. 5), and that there could be a big crane of that description (No. 6)." (II. 26-75).

III

Elāṣādha narrated his experiences thus: "In my youth, greedy as I was, I pursued the fad of metallic transmutation and wandered everywhere in search of the specific juice, etc. On getting the information, I travelled a long distance with steps covering hundred Yojanas, lifted a huge lid-stone, took the necessary juice from the golden pond, put the lid as before, and then returned home. Through the favour of that fluid, I had plenty of wealth and abundant possessions: servants waited on me, bards praised me, and young girls sang and danced round me. I gave gifts to the poor and needy. Hearing about my wealth, a party of well-equipped robbers besieged my palace at night. I thought, I must defend my well-earned property. With a bow in hand I fought against them and finished many of them on the spot. The rest of them attacked me at once, cut my head, put it on the badara tree, and went away after robbing all my property.) My head comfortably began eating the badara fruits, and this was seen by people early in the morning. They realized that it was still living and joined all my limbs; and here I stand before you in person. If you find my personal experience unreliable, well, then give a feast." (III. 1-19).

Śaśa affirmed that Elāṣāḍha's experience was quite reliable, because there are similar cases in Purāṇas, Bhārata and Rāmāyaṇa: 1) Jamadagni suspected the fidelity of his wife Reṇukā who was enamoured of king Aśvāpahṛta and ordered his son [Paraśu-] Rāma to cut her head. He was pleased with his son Rāma who carried out the order and asked him to demand a boon. Rāma solicited that his mother should be restored to life; and she was made alive by Jamadagni. 2) The two halves of his body were conjoined by Jarā; and later on he became the great king Jarāsamdha. 3) The gods conspired to destroy the two mighty brothers, Sunda and Nisunda, who proved a terror to them. They contributed bits from their bodies and thus created an extremely beautiful nymph, Tilottamā by name. Humbly she received orders from gods and started on her mission to destroy the two brothers. Seeing her tempting limbs, Sunda and Nisunda grew passionate for her; they fought mutually for her sake and destroyed each other. Thus the gods could create Tilottama by putting bits from their own bodies. 4) In his childhood Hanumat was instructed by his mother Anjana that he was to eat red fruits whenever hungry. He mistook the sun for a fruit; and when he jumped up to snatch the solar orb, his body was reduced to pieces. Seeing his wife lamenting and the son killed, Pavana became enraged and retired to Pātāla. There was no breeze in the world, and people were very much worried. The gods approached and appeased him. The limbs of his son were put together, and he was made alive. His chin was missing; so in the absence of it, he came to be called Hanumat. Thus Hanumat could be made alive by putting together bits of his body. 5) When Rāma went to Lankā, a fierce fight ensued between his army and that of Rāvaṇa. In course of fight prince Laksmana fell heavily wounded, and Rāma began to lament. Hanumat, however, went to Dronagiri and brought Niśśalyā herb. Not only Laksmana was cured thereby but all the monkeys that were lying wounded were also healed and made alive. 6) Siva and Pārvatī were enjoying amorous pleasure in a Himālayan cave for a long time; and all the gods were anxious, because they did not want any progeny from them. After long deliberations, they decided that Agni, obliging as he was, should go to Iśvara who might then perhaps abstain from coition. Agni was rather unwilling, because Śiva was a terrible and uncongenial fellow. Indra, however, prevailed upon Agni who was assured that Siva would certainly behave better in the company of Umā. Though intervened by Umā, Īśvara was enraged to see Agni there and forced him to drink his semen. Agni was in flames as it were due to that semen; he rushed to the ocean; and he felt some relief only after vomitting it there. It is said that jewels arose out of this semen. Whatever bit was still remaining in his stomach Agni vomitted in a lotus-lake. Six nymphs, called Krttikā, were bathing in that lake; and they happened to conceive at the contact of semen. After the necessary period of time, they delivered the head, arms, thighs, trunk, etc. When they brought together the limbs with surprise, they got joined mutually at their proper places; and thus Mahāsena was born. He leads the rigorous life of a celebate and dwells in a forest in the South. Thus the limbs produced from different wombs could get joined and Mahāsena could be produced. 7) Rāhu has no head; still he moves in the sky and swallows (or eclipses) the sun and the moon. 8) Visnu, in the guise of a Dvija, begged of Bali only three steps of the ground, pervaded thereby the whole world, and deprived him of the earth. 9) It is reported in the Rāmāyana that Hanumat, when Laksmana fell wounded in the battle between Rāma and Rāvaṇa, brought the lofty mountain Droṇa with its vegetation, as he wanted some herb. 10) Madhumatha, in his incarnation of Varāha, lifted up the earth with its mountains, trees, etc.

If the above events are true, it is quite believable that the limbs of your body could get joined (Nos. 1-6), that your head could taste badara fruits

(No. 7), that you could have a step measuring one hundred yojanas (No. 8), and that you could lift up the heavy stone of the lid (Nos. 9-10)." (III. 20-98).

Saśa narrated his experience thus: "I have my field near the mountain, and once I went there from my village during autumn. An elephant rushed on me from the mountain. I trembled with fear and somehow managed to climb a lofty sesamum tree. The elephant whirled round the tree; sesamum seeds were showered all round; and when they were crushed under its hoofs, there was a flood of sesamum oil. Stuck deep in mud, the elephant died of hunger and thirst. I breathed a sigh of relief, got down the tree, drank some ten pots of sesamum oil and ate a load of seed-stuff, prepared a bag of that elephant's hide, filled it with oil, and entered my village after placing that bag on a tree outside. I asked my son to bring the bag; but he could not see it; so he pulled out the tree and brought it home. This is my personal experience; well, if any one does not believe all this, he should entertain us with a feast." (IV. 1–13)

Khandapānā said that there were parallels to Śaśa's experience in the Bhārata, Rāmāyaņa etc. She continued to confirm the same: "1) It is reported that, at Pāṭaliputra, a drum was carved from the wood of māṣa plant. 2) According to the Bharata the ichor fluid of elephants flowed like a flooded river, washing down elephants, horses and chariots. 3) Bhīmasena killed the demon Baka at Ekacakra and gulped pots of rice, a buffalo and a thousand jugs of wine. 4) It is said that Kumbhakarna, whenever he woke up, ate hundreds of men and drank a thousand pots of water. 5) According to Puranas, the saint Agastya drank the ocean in order to destroy Asuras. 6) On her way from heaven, the river Ganga passed through the matted hair of Hara. When she flowed through the hermitage of Jahnu, he gulped and retained her in his stomach for one thousand years. 7) The saint Kāśyapa had two wives, Kadrū and Vinatā. These cowives once betted: the loser should either become a life-long slave of the other or give nectar for her freedom. Vinatā became the slave of Kadrū who tried to disgrace her now and then. She was always miserable. Once she laid three eggs: the first produced a half-grown scorpion, and the second, the thighless Aruna who later on became the charioteer of the sun. She learnt a lesson, and broke the third egg after it was fully ripe. The mighty Garuda was produced; and he proved a great danger to the sons of Kadrū who, on that account, constantly teased Vinata. On her being requested by Garuda, Vinata explained to him how she was mise. rable due to her slavery and how she would be freed by the nectar the source of which was known to his blind father, now staying in the Badarī Aśrama. He went to Kāśyapa who recognised him by touch. According to his father's wish, that hungry Garuda satisfied his hunger by eating a huge elephant and an equally huge tortoise which were constantly disturbing the lake by mutual quarrel. On his way back he saw a huge, extensive Vata tree under which millions of Valakhilya saints, the progeny of Brahman, were practising penance.

Garuda sat on its branches, but they cracked easily. Fearing that the saints underneath might be killed, Garuda picked up that tree in his beak, flew across the sky to the great surprise of gods, and dropped it on an island which is known as Lankā and which is the abode of Rāvana. Once more he feasted on the Niṣādas. He learnt from his father that the nectar-pond is situated beyond the hells and Patala; it is surrounded by burning flames; and that it is constantly guarded by gods, etc. One has to offer oblations to the flames, and then perhaps it might be obtained. He went there, satisfied the flames, and picked up the nectar-pot. Gods equipped with arms and weapons pursued him; and a heavy battle took place with Garuda on one side and the rest on the other. When the party of gods was routed away, Indra came on the field and used his missile without any effect. He invoked the help of Visnu who pursued Garuda with his Cakra. Saints, planets, etc. approached Visnu and told him that it was below his dignity to follow Garuda like this. Treaty was effected between the two, and Garuda became the banner of Visnu. Vinata was set free by that nectar. Thus the elephant and tortoise could be killed and the banyan tree could be carried by Garuda. 8) When it was heavily raining for a week, Madhumatha lifted the mountain Govardhana. 9) While building the dam the monkeys brought mountains from a long distance and dropped them in the 10) In destroying the park Hanumat easily rooted out big trees.

If the above details are true, it is quite believable that there could be such a big sesamum tree (No. 1), that there could be a stream of oil (No. 2), that you could eat a load of seed-stuff and drink ten pots of oil (Nos. 3-6), that you could carry the bag made of elephant-skin (Nos. 7-8), and that your son could pull out the tree and carry it home (Nos. 9-10)." (IV. 14-94).

i) Then that Khaṇḍapānā, the authoress of the Arthaśāstra, suggested that all others should humble themselves before her to get a feast. Of course they were too proud to fold their hands to her. She smiled and began to narrate her experience: "In my youth I was enchantingly beautiful. After the monthly bath, while sleeping in the veranda, I was enjoyed by the passionate Wind. Immediately I delivered a son; and after taking my leave, he went away somewhere. Tell me whether it is a lie; if it is true that the Wind can procreate a son, no barren woman would be found in this world." (V. 1-10).

Mūladeva confirmed her experience thus: "1) According to popular scriptures, the Wind procreated Bhīmasena from Kuntī and Hanumat from Nīlā. 2) Vyāsa, born from Pārāśara and a fisher-woman, Yojanagandhā by name, walked away soon after his birth, instructing his mother to remember him on occasions. Through the favour of that saint, Yojanagandhā became a virgin again, was married to Śantanu and had a son Vicitravīrya who died without issues. She remembered Vyāsa fearing that the family might become extinct; and he procreated Pāṇḍu, Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Vidura, but cursed his bed-mates in the end. In the light of these events, it is quite natural that the Wind generated a child in you; and it walked away immediately after delivery." (V. 11-19).

- ii) Khandapānā narrated further: "Once my friend Umā entrusted me with miraculous syllables whereby I attracted the burning Sun who procreated in me a mighty son; but no harm was done to me." 3) Kandarīka said that it was quite possible, because Kuntī too was not burnt in any way by the Sun [who generated Karna from her]. (V. 20-23).
- iii) Khandapānā added further: "A second time I attracted Agni, the mouth of gods, by whom a brilliant son was born to me; and I was not burnt in the least. How is it?" Elāṣāḍha silenced her thus: "4) The wife of Yama was being enjoyed by Agni; but on seeing that her husband arrived there, she swallowed Agni. Yama gulped her, and entered the assembly of gods who welcomed him as 'Mr. yourself, the third'. He vomitted his wife; and she vomitted Agni who ran into the forest being pursued by him. The elephants did not give Yama any report, so he deprived them of their speech. Thus if Yama's wife was not burnt, how could you be burnt?" (V. 24-31).
- iv) Khaṇḍā added again that once she attracted Indra by whom she had a son; and she asked how Indra could come to her in preference to celestial nymphs. Śaśa told her that it was quite possible: 5) Ahalyā was enjoyed by Indra who thereby suffered heavily at the hands of Gautama and whose consequent bodily pores became his thousand eyes; 6) secondly, Kuntī also got a son by Indra. (V. 32-37).
- v) On her inquiry, Mūladeva told Khandapānā that she was the daughter of Nāgaśarman and Somaśrī of Pātaliputra and her Gotra was Gautama. Khandapānā complained that her identity was confused, and narrated a bit of her biography thus: "My name is Dagdhikā, the artisan's daughter, well-known among royal washer-men. My profession has been low, though our family is quite prosperous. Thousands of washermen worked under me; and with them, one day, I went to the river with a cart-load of clothes which were all washed clean and spread in the sunshine. Suddenly they were blown off by a whirl-wind. I asked the servants to run away and took the responsibility on me. Lest the king might punish me, I assumed the form of a lizard and reached the city park at night. Early morning I feared, I might be killed for a dish. After a good deal of thought, I changed myself into a mango plant. After day-break I heard the royal drum declaring all washermen to be excused; and once again I became a woman. The leather straps, etc. from the carts were eaten at night by jackals and dogs; but my father procured a mouse-tail out of which he got all of them once more prepared." Sasa said that it is quite believable that the tail of a mouse was so big as to prepare straps, etc., 7) because we know that the male organ of Siva was immeasurably long, and 8) because the tail of Hanumat was so long as to encircle the city of Lanka which was burnt by it on its being covered with clothes, sprinkled with oil and ignited. He further added: 'It is quite possible that you became a lizard and a mango plant, because we hear in the Purānas thus: 9) Gandhārikāvara transformed himself into a Kurabaka tree. 10) Then there was that mighty king Nahuṣa who vanquished Indra; but being cursed by Bṛhaspati, he became a boa in a forest. When Pāṇḍavas were banished into wilderness, the boa swallowed Bhīma. Dharma gave necessary replies to the boa which consequently vomitted Bhīma and which became the king at last.'

Khandapānā requested the rest of the rogues to accept quietly her authority, and then she would entertain them with a feast. In case she were to defeat them actually, they would be as worthless as a broken cowrie. The rogues thundered in reply that no one, not even a divine rogue, can vanquish them. With a view to put them to shame, she continued her biography and addressed them further: "With king's permission, I visited many places in search of those clothes blown off by the wind. I had lost, moreover, four of my servants since long; and in search of them I came here. I find now that you are those very servants and that you are wearing those very clothes. Either you accept this as true and be my slaves; or if you do not, well, give the feast." All of them felt ashamed; as they were outwitted, they accepted her as their chief; and they requested her to entertain all the rogues during the rainy week. (V. 38-78).

Khandapānā smiled to see that their manly vanity was smashed; but when they all insisted on getting a feast from her, she agreed to that. She went to the burial ground which presented a hedious and horrible spectacle. She managed to get a dead baby which was physically intact and lately dropped there. After bathing it and muffling it in rags, she entered Ujjaini, approached a banker's mansion, and addressed the busy banker that she was a Brāhmin's daughter, that she had lately delivered a son, and that she was badly in need of money. The busy banker got irritated and asked his servants to drive her out. When force was used, she fell on the ground; and she started beating her breast etc. and lamenting loudly that her son, the only hope of her life, was killed by the banker who was so proud of his wealth. The banker was upset, and with all efforts tried to console her, requesting her not to raise a cry. He gave her an ear-ring and asked her to remove the child quietly. She removed the dead body, and by that banker's gift everything was allright. After throwing the dead babe, she went to the jewel-market jubilantly; she sold the ring and gave a rich feast to the rogues who were shivering with cold. They all heartily congratulated her on her skill and generosity, and openly confessed that woman is wiser by birth than man. (V. 79-110).

In this world various personalities like Candra, Indra, Vāyu, Sūrya, Agni and Dharma are all oppressed by passions. According to the scripture, Kṛṣṇa is ubiquitous and all-pervasive¹; then where is the need of his thinking about those (Gopīs) who are anxious for him? There are many other unbelievable legends current in the world, such as, the origin of (Pavana) Gaṇapati² from the limbs of Pārvatī; the births of Brahman, Tilottamā, Urvaśī, Drona and Ṣaṇmukha; the release of Narakūbara through Kṛṣṇa; the procreation of Svedakuṇḍala through anger and that of Nara (i. e., Raktakuṇḍala) from a pot of blood; and the birth of Yādava Balarāma through Māyā's mediation. Pārvatī was the daughter of mountain: if mountains are to deliver children, the world would be too small for human population. These and such other stories from the Bhārata and Rāmāyaṇa are like artificial gold; and they do not stand the test of rational scrutiny. The popular scriptures do not contain any attractive stuff. Leaving them, therefore, one should follow the path preached by the Sarvajña with a steady and pure faith. (V. 111-22).

This fine Kathā, with its various legends, has been narrated to the pious residents of Citrakūta³; it has been composed by Haribhadrasūri for purifying the faith; and may it bestow bhava-viraha on the faithful who hear and narrate it. (V. 123-24).

Let Haribhadra, the Śvetāmbara Sūri, who has such a faith in the brilliant Jaina doctrine, bestow welfare on us. (V. 125).

3. Purpose, Technique and Form

Whatever may be their historical explanation and symbolical signification, there are innumerable legends, scattered all over the epics and Purānas, which, on account of some detail or the other, are unnatural, inconsistent, exaggerated and unacceptable to reason. The 'precious blossoms of immortal poetic art and profound wisdom' seen in the epics are often overpowered by an array of irrational legends. "It is only unpoetical theologians and commentators and clumsy copyists who have succeeded in conglomerating into a heterogeneous mass parts which are actually incompatible and which date from different centuries."4 What is true of the Mahābhārata is much more true about the Puranas which are well-known for their sectarian multiplication of myths and legends and hyperbolic exaggeration of details. Even from amongst the custodians and adherents of these texts the revisionists have tried their hands on them partly to make the legends conform to the changing ethico-moral notions and partly to rationalise and humanise them by removing glaring inconsistencies etc. This is amply borne out by the recensions and textual variations detected by critical editors. The episode of Draupadi's marriage and the way in which the later Kāvyas etc. use the Purāṇic legends sufficiently illustrate the above tendencies. We cannot expect the zealous follower to ridicule in any way the Purāṇic legends or to raise a moral protest against the sins in the world of gods, held by him in reverence. That Kannada poet Sarvajña is an exception. He has spared none from his severe satirical stings. According to him our Mahābhārata is a tale of brothers killing brothers and of looseness of marriage institution (hādara); and those who respectfully attend to it degrade themselves.

Haribhadra's attack, in the Dhūrtākhyāna, is directed against such legends found in the epics and Purāṇas. His conclusion is threefold: the popular scriptures, when one scrutinizingly studies them, are found to contain worthless stuff that looks smooth only from outside (V. 120); the legends narrated in them do not stand the test of rational scrutiny and are unacceptable like artificial gold (V. 119); and the pious, who believed in them so far, should abandon them and follow the path of Sarvajña (V. 121). Indirectly, but inevitably, these works being religious scriptures, the entire Purāṇic religion and its followers are being exposed to criticism; the former for having contained such legends and the latter for their acceptance of the same.

Logical polemics and witty criticism are the two recognised modes of attack; their ultimate purpose is to knock down the opponent; but their ways and intermediate tactics are different, and the weapons in their armouries and their movements on the field are dissimilar. The former necessarily requires an elaborate and systematic seige and a trained audience to pronounce the judgement; while the latter needs alert wit and advoit movements. If one is a trenched battle, the other is a guerilla warfare. The success of the former leaves behind acrimony that might involve endless attacks and counter attacks; but that of the latter wounds the opponent without leaving a scar and pricks him without bleeding. Logicians can be trained for the purpose, but a witty critic is an artist by birth.

Haribhadra is an eminent logician, no doubt; but, in this work, on the whole, we see him more as a witty critic assailing the citadel of Purāṇic legends. The plot of the work is simple. It is a story of five rogues each of whom recounts an impossible, fantastical experience which is confirmed to be true by one or the other colleague after quoting parallels from the Mahābhārata, Rāmāyaṇa, etc. In the last chapter this mode of presentation is slightly modified. It is their female accomplice that narrates her experiences; and the remaining take their respective chances to confirm the same by Purāṇic parallels. She narrates her biography, and suddenly puts them on the horns of a dilemma: if they accept her statement, they have to submit to her as slaves; and if they refuse, they have to give a feast to the whole gathering. They find that they are outwitted; her superiority is accepted; she trickily extracts wealth from a merchant by charging him with the murder of her child; and all the rogues get a grand feast from her. To this plot, which is mainly made up of conversation with casual descriptions, there is a Preamble (I. 1-16) which introduces the rogues, their stipulation and their agreement, besides the opening mangala; and there is also a Conclusion (V. 111f.) which summarily denounces some of the legends, besides giving the author's conclusion, aim and personal details.

The improbable and fantastic tales narrated by the rogues as a part of their experience, are consistent and compact units. Even the elements of exaggeration are quite in keeping with medieval tales. If they were not followed by any legendary confirmation, they could be easily passed off as amusing and adventurous tales, quite innocent in their constitution. But when the author holds them up side by side with the Puranic legends, their sarcastic potency becomes at once apparent. The tales by themselves speak highly for the skilful inventiveness of Haribhadra. As they stand, I think, they are composed by Haribhadra himself, keeping in view the Puranic legends to be denounced. The stories thus are his creation; but quite well known in Indian literature are some of their motifs: namely, a wild elephant pursuing a traveller; people holding a fair in honour of a Yaksa; a robber-party attacking a caravan; an ambitious youth pursuing the mirage of metallic transmutation by procuring some juice from an inaccessible pond; etc. It is the use of these motifs that at once lends a popular air and a sort of reality to the tales of rogues. The first four stories illustrate the author's ingenuity as also the richness of his imagination, whereas the story of Khandapānā shows his wit and fund of worldly wisdom.

Haribhadra has a special fascination for popular stories of humorous and satirical style. Some of them in Prākrit he quotes in his commentary on the Daśavaikālikasūtra.¹ In one we have a group of Kārpatikas; they begin narrating their fantastical experiences; but a rational Śrāvaka tries to expose the weakness in the narration.² In another context he quotes a fine dilemmatic short story which reminds us of the dilemma of Khaṇḍapānā:³ In a certain town there was a Parivrājaka who roamed about with a golden bowl declaring that he would give it to one who narrated to him an unheard event. A Śrāvaka addressed him thus, 'Your father owed to my father one hundred thousand coins: if you know this already, please return the amount; but if you do not know it, please give the golden bowl as declared by you.' He also quotes a fine satirical verse in Sanskrit, possibly summarising some earlier conversation in Prākrit, made up of questions and answers. It is said to be put in the mouth of a Dhūrta and addressed to a Buddhist monk who had a net-like garment on his person. The verse may be freely rendered thus¹: "Sir, why is your garment thread-bare? Well, it is for netting fish. Do you eat fish? I take them when excited by wine. Do you drink wine? When I mate with a hetaera. Do you visit a prostitute? After kicking on the necks of my enemies. Whence have you enemies? Those whose houses I have broken into. Are you a burglar? Just for the purpose of gambling. Are you a Rogue? Because I am a slavegirl's son." These illustrate Haribhadra's acquaintance with and aptitude for humorous and satirical folktales.

Haribhadra is an adept story-teller. If we casually glance through his Samarāiccakahā, we find that he is well-informed about the workings of human mind and about the human behaviour in general. His experience is wide; naturally he creates characters and situations of engrossing interest. The Samarāiccakahā² gives many counter tales which go to confirm the central idea of the main story. He possesses a special liking for symbolical epilogues, apparently meaningless, but full of significance and instruction when they are explained. Enlightenment by absurd stories and situations is a fine weapon which Haribhadra brandishes quite successfully. Arhaddatta (Sixth Bhava), for instance, was enlightened when he was incurably attached to the pleasures of body by telling him that he was as foolish as a person extinguishing fire with grass. Absurd situations are presented illustrating such motifs. Similar tendencies are seen in the Dhū. as well. The fantastic tales expose the absurdity of Purāṇic legends, and thus enlighten and correct those that put faith in the Purāṇic religion.

It is the agreement of rogues that supplies a graceful bracket for the projection of the plot. Lest he would be required to give the stipulated feast, every rogue is anxious to confirm the fantastic stories by quoting similar Purāṇic legends. It is in the fitness of things that every rogue should be given the chance of confirming the experience of their female companion; otherwise, if only one were to be given this chance, there would arise some jealousy and others would not have the opportunity of being chivalrous. It is not the story as a whole, but just some of the convenient points of it that are selected for confirmation with one or more similar legends and episodes from the epics and Purāṇas. The legends get automatically ridiculed, because they are closely parallel to the incidents or points in the fantastic story. As the rogues go on attempting to prove the impossible with the aid of Purāṇic legends, the legends themselves get ridiculed. Thus, to a certain extent, the author is using the mode of reductio ad absurdum in denouncing the legends.

All of them are confirmed rogues, quite expert in their business; and it is not without some significence that they should be made to dabble in Puranic legends, as if this was quite on par with their usual routine! It looks like a bit of irony that the legends should be put in the mouth of rogues and that they should come forth to prove the impossible by quoting them! Akhyana is usually a serious tale, especially an epical or Purānic episode. It is certainly a piece of pungent sarcasm, if Akhyana refers here (V. 6) to the fantastic tales narrated by rogues. If it refers to the series of Puranic legends and episodes, it is equally ironical that they should be put in the mouth of rogues and that both of them should prominently figure in the title of the book! Thus the plot, the mode and accessories of attack and even the title: all these are not only appropriate but also partial and favourable for the artistic performance which Haribhadra has achieved here. Even minor touches add to the ironical flavour of the atmosphere: Muladeva declares that he is putting up with parisaha such as hunger and thirst (I. 28), a veritable Jaina monk indeed!; Kandarika salutes the feet of Jina like a pious devotee (II. 24); Khamdavānā qualifies herself as atthārasa-dosavivajjiyā (V. 98), an adjective usually applied to the Tirthakara; and lastly, that hypocritically exacted tip is glorified as a Dana, a pious donation, which renders everything allright (V. 102). There are some drawbacks: sometimes the same legends and motifs are repeated and in some places there is some obscenity. As to the first one wished that the author avoided this repetition; but as to the second, it was inevitable, if the author wanted to expose the obscenity of some of the Purāņic legends.

By assimilating different traditions Western literature has come to possess an astonishing variety of literary expression. The fact becomes obvious even to a superficial student of English literature, if he simply notes its chief landmarks and growth. Scholars comparing the ancient Indian literature with that of the English are struck with the manifold variety, range and artistic appeal in the latter. The disparity can be explained away on the basis of the peculiar lines on which each civilization advanced. Apart from its intrinsic merits and abiding values, in a way, by taking into account the range of time covered by the civilization, the extent of the land and the magnitude of the population, one has to admit that the ancient Indian literature, available to us today, is comparatively small in quantity and limited in variety. The reasons are apparent. On the whole, the Indian mind has enjoyed the comfort of dignified isolation from constant foreign influence. Religious spirit has permeated not only Indian life, but also Indian literature: even secular compositions could not escape religio-moral influence. Both men of letters and literary life in India are confined, as a rule, to an insignificant minority of hereditory intellectual aristocrats. Antiquity is an asset, but not necessarily a virtue. Old turns of expression and moulds of thought got stereotyped, and as conventions they had a metallic grip on ancient Indian literature. Even the training of an Indian poet or author is of a standardised cast: the aims are settled; the themes are dictated; type-characters are supplied; and even ready-made descriptions and stylistic devices are kept at the disposal of an author in the making. Ordinary intellect got crippled, though sufficiently trained; it is only the extraordinary genius that attempted to open new literary paths somewhat deviating from the accepted In isolated branches of literature, the Indian mind exhibits remarkable elevation, successful finish and consummate polish; but the lack of variety is apparent everywhere. The fact that ancient India, which could boast of the greatest master-pieces in epic poetry and certain kinds of fiction and drama, has neither a tragedy after the manner of the Greeks nor satire in Roman fashion is to be attributed to the peculiar way in which the Indian mind evolved and the Indian author was trained for his job. The Sanskrit or even Indian poetic theory of super-individual emotion and its complacent attitude towards life', as Dr. De remarks, 'precluded any serious cultivation of the satiric type of literature.'

Satire as a form of literature has been conspicuously absent in early Indian literature. India, however, has not been lacking in literary geniuses that were trained according to standard discipline. Every age has its follies and faults; and these geniuses, on account of their righteous indignation and as a wholesome correction, must have brandished their satirical whip against social disorders and diseases. Such satirical compositions could not have the same sanctity as that enjoyed by religious works; and it is not unlikely that many specimens have not come down to us, even if the art of satire was duly cultivated. Satire, moreover, is an indispensable stylistic quality in some forms of literature; and the elements of this quality are found scattered, here and there, in early Indian literature: in stories, in minor poems and in plays.

The Daśakumāracarita, on account of its setting, substance, characters and events, is far from possessing the stereotyped orthodox outlook: in fact, it is a remarkable contribution of a novel type in Sanskrit. It presents a lively and realistic picture of the society, some glimpses of which we get in the Mṛcchakaṭikam. Daṇḍin is unconventional by temperament. Though it is not his aim to give his composition the form of a satire, he has easily meted out some satirical lashes against gods who are dragged down to illustrate the disgraceful deeds of the characters (pp. 29, 44), against Brāhmaṇas who are greedy for wealth and divert themselves by cock-fighting (p. 96), against hypocritical ascetics whose passion is easily enkindled (p. 44 f.), against the Digambara Jaina monk who is made to confess the worthlessness of his mode of life (p. 47 f.), and against Buddhist nuns who are ridiculed as go-betweens. The adventurous tales of young princes have an enchanting grip on the reader's mind; and Daṇḍin's tendency to ridicule certain aspects of the society by satire and caricature, quietly but effectively, is apparent in various places. In this context attention may be drawn to the Bharaṭaka-Dvātrimśikā², a late work of the fourteenth century A. D. in popular Sanskrit. The term bharaṭaka means a kind of Śaiva monks; and this collection of thirty-two tales is designed for purposes of exposing the mūrkha-jana-carita so that one might understand sadācaraṇa. The Śaiva monks are satirized by means of stories illustrating their moral depravity and stupidity. The bharaṭaka is made to quote the parallels of gods and saints to justify his behaviour, thus ridiculing the gods and saints as well with himself. Some of the stories exhibit a good fund of worldly wisdom, wit and humour.

Somehow the element of satire seen in poems and plays is not of a very high order: the art of satirising becomes bald abuse and coarse ridicule, if it does not leave behind a healthy and correcting influence. The Kuttinīmata of Dāmodaragupta (c. 779-813 A. D.) is more erotico-comic than satiric.8 Another polymath who has studiously worked in this line is Ksemendra, of the middle of the eleventh century A. D. Some of his works deserve special attention in this context. His Samayamātrkā deals with the traditional erotic topics. It presents varied pictures of the society, and the situations are sketched in a pointed style. "The merit of the work lies not in its unsavoury story, but in its heightened, yet graphic, picture of droll-life, painted with considerable sharpness of phrasing and characterisation, and with an undertone of mocking satire directed against many forms of prevalent deformity." His Darpadalana is equally interesting. His salutation to viveka in the opening Mangala is quite significant. In seven sections it demonstrates the folly of pride based on kula, dhana, vidyā, rūpa, saurya, dāna and tapas, gnomic verses on each, they are illustrated with tales invented for the purpose. The form is interesting. More than once the author drags the Puranic deities and personalities on a lower plain by citing how they have not been immune from these flaws (I. 17 f., III. 79 f., IV. 18 f., etc.). The moral tone is quite predominant; and the attack on holiness, though casual, is sufficiently pungent. His Kalāvilāsa is a satirical discourse in ten sections, put in a legendary setting. The first chapter lashes the roguish hyprocrisy, dambha, seen in different walks of life, found not only among men and women of different classes but also among birds and vegetables. He is harsh on Gaudas; and now and then even sacred deities and sages are not spared. The remaining chapters deal with greed, erotic impulse, harlot, Kāyastha, pride, etc. His scourges on the greedy merchant, quack doctor, pretending astrologer, crooked

Kāyastha, etc., are bitter and wounding. This 'work is thus a remarkable and comprehensive discourse, with a legendary framework, on the various activities of notorious tricksters known to Ksemendra; and his easy and elegant style makes the descriptions amusing and the satire effective.' As observed by Dr. De, Ksemendra's compositions are 'noteworthy satirical sketches exaggerated cum grano salis but substantially faithful, having less frequent lapses into squalor or coarseness, and composed in the best literary manner of Ksemendra. There is nothing of melancholy wisdom in Ksemendra. Knowing full well the castigating use of satire, he deals out his blows too liberally, but with precision, with bitter and often foul-mouthed presumption, but with the unerring, insight of a shrewd observer'. Ksemendra's satirical writings assume all the more importance, because his successors like Jahlana, Nīlakantha Dīksita, etc. never rose to his heights. They are all steeped in the time-honoured mould of religious didacticism and hackneyed eroticism. 'Anxious to maintain respectability, they are afraid of descending to the repellent reality which their subject demands, and only touch the fringe of it, from a safe distance, with the stick of romantic verse.'

Among the plays, it is the Bhana and the Prahasana types that contain a great deal of satirical element. Bhana is a monologue play; the only character is a Vita or Dhurta who narrates, with imaginary questions and answers and with various gestures, either his experience or that of others. Most of the existing specimens of bhanas are comparatively modern and belong to the South; they lack variety and are of the same pattern, almost made to order; and they are predominantly permeated with erotic sentiment, very often coarse in taste. There is very little of genuine satire in them; we get, however, satirical touches in the descriptions of the licentious Pauranika, the old Śrotriya, the fraudulent astrologer and (but this rarely) the Jangamas, Saivas and Vaisnavas (as in the Śrigāratilaka).' The Hāsyacūdāmaņi of Vatsarāja ridicules the Bhagavatas; while the Mukundananda pours a great deal of pungent satire against the Gurjara people. Such satirical touches are almost thrown into back-ground by their mechanichal characters, the roguish parasites and the haterea and by excessive eroticism. The four Bhanas, which are edited as Caturbhānī² and which definitely belong to an earlier age, present 'more variety, greater simplicity, a larger amount of social satire and comic relief, a more convincing power of drawing individuals rather than types, easier and more colloquial style, and some measure of real poetry in spite of certain coarseness." In the Padmaprābhrtaka, the Vita, Sasa by name, a friend of Karniputra Muladeva (both of them of Ujjaini), gets a specified individuality. The racy speeches of the Vita, in the Pādatāditaka, are remarkably satirical; his ridicule is abundantly directed against the Lāṭas and the Buddhist order; and the Dāserakas, Saurāṣṭras and Mālavas are not spared from casual hits. These Bhāṇas are often obscene, if not vulgar; and the primal sensations are portrayed with a rough realism and terrible sincerety. For a student of literature, as Dr. De rightly remarks, 'it is more than useless to read austere morals into these old-time play-wrights or damn them for want of morals.'

Turning to the Prahasana, the popular farce, there is ample scope for social satire in it by the very nature of its subject-matter; but the specimens that have survived are far from being satisfactory. Their wit and humour, which would make one laugh, lie in deliberately vulgar exhibitions and expressions: in short, the whole atmosphere in the Prahasana, on account of conventional characters and incidents and the high-strung erotic sentiment, is low and depressing. The Mattavilasa of Mahendravikrama (7th Century A. D.) is a slight farcical sketch depicting the drunken and passionate revelry of a Saiva mendicant, calling himself a Kapalin on account of the human skull carried by him in lieu of his alms-bowl which is said to be stolen by a hypocritical Buddhist monk. A degenerate Pāśupata comes to settle the case of theft, and finally the missing bowl is obtained from a madman who had retrieved it from a dog. Thus the wreckless wrangling in the monastic order is broadly satirised. The Prahasanas like Lataka-melaka, Dhūrtasamāgama, etc. have much to do with rogues and knaves; the Jaina and Buddhist monks are held in ridicule; but with their symbolic characters, whatever little wit and satire they possess is often defaced by open vulgarity and erotic descriptions. Stray satirical verses in Sanskrit and Prākrit may be collected from anthologies and from illustrations on the rhetorical device called vyāja-stuti; but they cannot, being isolated verses, exhibit any sustained style as such. Thus this survey leaves us cold that early Indian literature has not achieved much in the field of satire.

Haribhadra is a genius by birth and a satirist by temperament. He has bequeathed to posterity a valuable contribution to Indian literature through his Dhūrtākhyāna which is unique in various respects. We might try to assess its value, as a work of art, from the point of view of a modern critic of letters. The terminology of English criticism¹ cannot be literally applied to Indian works, because the terms have sometimes specified associations and import. The Dhū. apparently looks like a parody in as much as it ridicules by imitation, but if we go into details we find that it cannot be called a parody for various reasons: no work or class of works is continuously ridiculed through word-, form- or sense-rendering; secondly, the imaginary tales narrated by rogues do not easily remind us of any one story or of any work or class of works; thirdly, the legends that are ridiculed do not come serially or at random from any one composition, but they are heaped from different sources to hold in ridicule their common motif something like what is already noted in the invented tale; and lastly, there is no deliberate attempt on the part of the author to confound issues by distortion or exaggeration of facts. The Dhurtakhvana, therefore, can be better and more appropriately called a satire of incredible Puranic legends and episodes and against the credulity of those that believe them, using parodical imitation as its chief vehicle and casually taking recourse to irony, sarcasm, banter, wit and humour. It is a satire, and a perfect one, because of its unique construction, a delicious mingling of phantasy and reality, subtle sense of characterization (though in a limited quantity) and above all the startling situation of devils discussing scriptures which make it an inimitable piece of raillery and a good humoured amusement for all. Haribhadra possesses a righteous indignation which is passionate, noble and fearless. Like a true satirist, he thoroughly ridicules rather objectively, in his Sambodha-prakarana, the vices that had perhaps crept into the Jaina monastic order of his times: he detests, pities and condemns the vices and the irreligious routine of the ascetic life; while in the Dhū, he satirizes the folly of the degenerating belief of the masses in Purānic legends. Monks are morally and religiously degraded, and the public is on the verge of rational bankruptcy; and here Haribhadra comes like an expert surgeonto ply his satirical instrument, before he can put the bandage of religious and didactic teaching. Like Voltaire, Haribhadra was out to cure, and he had a panacea, Reason. Haribhadra is a champion of rational and logical attitude; he declares in one place:2 'I am not partial to Mahāvīra, nor do I bear any ill will against Kapila and others; whose words appeal to reason, his mission is to be upheld.' He has given vent to this spirit more than once. The good satirist, we know, holds a place half-way between preacher and the wit. He has the purpose of the first and uses the weapons of the second. He must both hate and love. For what impels him to write is not less the hatred of error and folly than the love of right and wise vision. The satirist's appeal is always to the intellect, and rarely does he play upon the emotions. His is a perfectly rational attitude strengthened by the nicest sense of proportion. Like a rationalist, Haribhadra's approach is intellectual, apart from his being a champion of logic and reason; but his still greater asset is the mental poise with which he meets his opponents. He is not a logician infuriated with religious fanaticism, but he is a genuine rationalist of a balanced mind; and to a certain extent we see this even in the Dhurtakhyana. As a genius Haribhadra has at his back a fund of good logic. Quite skilfully and humorously, like a creative artist, he applies it to the incredible Puranic ideas which have a sway over men's minds; the invented tales are full of logical extremes and absurdities; and when the Puranic legends are set on par with them, they cannot but be ridiculous and absurd. The minds that start doubting the veracity of invented tales are easily led to denounce the Purāṇic legends. With untiring assiduity he scrutinizes, sorts and shifts the Purāṇic legends according to their points of weakness, and pours them forth to substantiate the most ridiculous extremes and distortions with the result that not only the purpose of proving the unprovable fails but the Purāṇic legends themselves get ridiculed as improbable and absurd. The result is startling, though inevitable. He satirizes the legends rather by exposing them by selection and comparing them with ridiculously fantastic tales than by vehemently denouncing them. As we see below, Haribhadra exhibits a remarkable intellectual honesty; so far as the main motifs are concerned, he does not tamper with the Purāṇic legends: he does not distort them to ridicule them.

² In his Lokatattva-nirnaya: 'पक्षपातो न मे नीरे न द्वेषः कपिलादिषु । युक्तिमद्वचनं यस्य तस्य कार्यः परिग्रहः ॥' and in his Yogabindu: 'आग्रही वत निनीषति युक्तिं तत्र यत्र मतिरस्य निनिष्टा । पक्षपातरहितस्य तु युक्तिर्यत्र तत्र मतिरसि निनेशम् ॥'

'The true end of satire is the amendment of vices by correction', says Dryden; and he is perfectly right in hitting at the end and aim of all great satires so emphatically. Haribhadra has undoubtedly a religio-moral purpose, hinted rather than elaborated (V. 122, 124), in writing this Akhyana. As has been observed, the polished raillery and the good natured satire have an ethical under-current, otherwise 'the satire which only seeks to wound is as dangerous as arrows that fly in the dark'. It must be said to Haribhadra's credit that the satirical artist in him has successfully, and also rightly, predominated over the religious preacher in him. 'No artist can do more than set his practised and controlled talent to work on the subject chosen and constantly developed for him by the inspiration of his genius.' Our author just exercises his imagination in the way laid down for him by his characters and circumstances; and one feels that even if he had stopped his work at V. 109 (of course followed by V. 119-24). nothing fundamental would have been missed. Nowhere does he show the temptation of preaching moral lessons like a professional religious teacher. Any other mediocre author would have introduced a Kevalin at the end to give a dhamma-kahā whereby all the rogues would be turned into pious believers who would ultimately reach liberation after observing samlehana. Haribhadra has fully and rightly restrained himself from adding to his composition any such conclusion so usual and normal in Jaina tales. The Dhurtakhyana, therefore, has a literary form, nothing specially religious about it; it is an out-and-out satire, an artist's creation; and as a literary product, it is far ahead of its time. In fact, coming so early as in the 8th century A.D., Dhū. reveals such an artistry and management of the material as one can simply marvel at. Not even the works of Ksemendra, who does possess a satirical skill and whose performance we have reviewed above, can match the Dhurtakhyana, which is nearly three hundred years older than him, with regard to construction and subtle satirical effect. Haribhadra is throughout an artist, while Ksemendra's satire is overladen with and defaced by heavy didacticism. If one understands our author's bhava-viraha as an escape from the tedium of life, Haribhadrasūri will have the credit of hitting at an accepted standard of the greatness of satire in modern times.

The characters introduced by Haribhadra are not altogether imaginary; but, in fact, most of them are well-known figures in Indian popular tale and picaresque literature. Mūlaśrī or Mūladeva¹ is a famous character as a Jack of all trades given to gambling and attached to courtezan Devadatta. It appears that he had alternative names such as Karnīsuta, Mūlabhadra and Kalānkura. Even a treatise on theft or erotics is attributed to him by tradition. Certainly he is an old figure. Haribhadra himself quotes a Prākrit story in his commentary on the Dasavaikālika-sūtra (p. 57 f.) in which Mūladeva figures as a tricky rogue. The Avantisundarīkathā (veres 7) mentions him; Bāṇa also, in his Kādambarī, refers to him with his friend Śaśa; and both of them are introduced (with Devadatta) in the Padmaprabhrtaka. He figures as a typical hero in the Kalāvilāsa of Ksemendra. The Kathāsaritsāgara also gives his story, and he is associated with the court of Vikramāditya. We get a Jaina edition of the tale of Muladeva and Devadatta quoted in Devendra's commentary on the Uttaradhyayana2. Thus Muladeva appears to have reached the status of a popular hero typifying all that is tricky and roguish. The name Kamdarīya is met with in the Ardhamāgadhī canon3; he is not a rogue, but a worldlycomfort-seeking character destined to go to hell. Jaina stories mention names like Ilāputra and Āṣāḍhabhūti; and according to the Abhidhāna-Rājendra, Elāṣādha is a famous rogue from Avanti referred to in the Niśītha-cūrnī4. Sasa, as noted above, appears to have been a close associate of Muladeva. We do not know anything about Khamdavana from other sources: her name has a popular ring and baffles Sanskritic etymology. Though most of the characters are already known, there is very little of characterization in the Dhūrtākhyāna. It is only Khandapānā, with her coarseness and sharp intellect, that is a bit individualized. She is a good combination of a woman and a rogue. She is intelligent, hypocritical, scheming and witty; her success in getting the wealth from the merchant is quite worthy of her nature and trade; without any difference of opinion she becomes the President of Rogues; and she smashes the vanity and satisfies the appetite of her colleagues by a well-earned and sumptuous feast. One wishes that Haribhadra spent more labour and greater insight in making the characters and stories more individualistic as has been done by Chaucer in his immortal Canterbury Tales.

The literary device of picaros narrating their experience with a satirical vein is seen to a certain extent in the Daśakumāracarita and in the Bhāṇa type of dramas, but the manner in which and the purpose for which Haribhadra has adopted it is remarkable. We know some of his successors like Amitagati etc., but we are absolutely in the dark about his predecessors in the field. The form, however, is dramatic in which characters are made to speak; Haribhadra tells us that it was narrated as a tale (V. 123), and not enacted as a play; but with minor changes the whole piece can be turned into a fine Prahasana of open satire.

The most astonishing thing about the Dhurtakhyana is not that it is satirical, nor that it is one of the rare pieces of the kind in early Indian literature, but that it should be so thoroughly modern both in thought and spirit, and such a master-piece of construction. Most of the Roman or the English satire is east in the mould of a dream or an allegory. This makes it stilted and artificial. It is only in Chaucer's Canterbury Tales and Boccacio's Decameron that an ingenious frame-work is used to impart an air of reality to the narration. The device of emboxing stories within a story is a common trait in most of the Indian sagas. Apart from this consideration, the frame-work of the Dhūrtākhyāna is certainly one of its notable features. The rogue-chiefs, each telling a fantastic story of his own and asking others to prove its truth or to accept defeat and give feast to rest of them, as they were all hungry during the rainy week and had run thither into the garden in order to manage to get food, afford the satire an amusing yet natural setting. The truth of their wonderful and wild stories is immediately proved by parallels from the Bhārata, Rāmāyaṇa and Purāṇas. The last chief who is a female recounts a number of autobiographical incidents which are likewise regarded as credible. But then, all this still keeps the main problem unsolved! How are they to get food for themselves and for their retinue? Their female accomplice proposes that she would give them a feast only if they acknowledged her supremacy. This they would never accept. She then, continuing her narration, leads it to such a point that they have to recognize her suzerainty or give feast. Thus the woman is triumphant, and her wit and wisdom enable them all to satisfy their most immediate need of food. The impossible yarns concocted by the Rogues, the replies thereto, and above all the witty and surprising end of the story reveal its architectonic skill and the beauty of design. The Dhurtakhyana has a unity and compactness that can be distinctly felt; and except for the one or two obscene references and blunt outspokenness and crudity of Khandapana's experience, there is nothing superfluous or inartistic in the satire. Besides, its perfectly original structure is one of its highest distinctions, and sufficient by itself to proclaim the author's genius.

In speaking of the unity of the Dhūrtākhyāna it was the organic unity, therefore unity of form and spirit both, that was hinted at. Even though there is an indirect reference in favour of Jainism at the close of the work

(V. 121-22), the satire as a whole is general, directed against credulity and superstition that deaden man's reasoning faculties and lead him away from the path of Truth. According to accepted critical standards, it is modern and not medieval, and it is more Horacian than Juvenalian. It is throughout rational and convincing. It shall be as well called good-humoured, as there is no deliberate attempt to distort or exaggerate facts or indulge in repeated rancour. The main point is that we should not be foolishly credulous and accept the mythological stories as literally true. As seen below, almost all the references to Purānas, etc. are traceable to their origins. The author is always implicit, and never vituperative in his criticism, and makes an intelligent use of dilemma, not only to prove or disprove things but also to give a witty air to everything that is ridiculed. Khandapana's cornering and outwitting her male accomplices is a brilliant example of this device. The use of such dilemmatic situations has given a logical tone (quite inevitable and essential in the work of an outstanding logician like Haribhadra) and balance to the narration. Except for a few repetitions (elephant-pursuit, mating with Sun. Wind etc.), the story has the fullest variety with its strange, mysterious, awe-inspiring and terrible phantasies set in a realistic back-ground and provided with a rollicking humorous close. Some of the descriptions, short or long, for instance that of the cemetery, are quite epical in style and make-up. The story element in the frame-work is comparatively slight, but has gained a remarkable poise because of Khandapānā's flashing victories over her partners and the banker whom she dupes by her superior intelligence and womanly wiles.

The precocious genius of the author, obvious in this unique work, indeed, provides a delightful field for researches in literary developments; and it is hoped that the publication of this edition of Dhurtakhyana will inspire others to unearth still richer treasures that lie buried in the literature of ancient India.

4. Sources of the Puranic Legends

Throughout the Dhū., in order to confirm the fantastic tale narrated by one Dhūrta, other Dhūrtas have presented a series of Epic and Purānic legends. It is necessary to study them, wherever possible, in comparison with ¹ Most of the works of Haribhadra are yet to be studied critically. The following are the chief sources where some points about his life, works and date are discussed. H. T. the legends as preserved in present-day texts. Haribhadra is not very particular in mentioning his sources, specifying the work and its author. Usually he refers to them in general terms like Śruti, Purāṇa etc. (I. 14, 31, 35, 53, 89; II. 27, 51; III. 20, 53, 88; IV. 15, 27; V. 11, 64); Bhārata¹ and Rāmāyaṇa, however, are repeatedly mentioned (I. 14, 31, 35, 41, 82, 85; II. 27, 62; III. 20, 93; IV. 14, 15, 19; V. 60, 119); and there are single references to Viṣṇupurāṇa and Araṇya-parvan (of the Bhārata) and also to Vyāsa, the author of Bhārata (II. 27; II. 31; I. 41). Once Arthaśāstra is casually mentioned (V. 1) but not as a source. In the following paragraphs are presented the Legends found in the Dhū., their sources traced by us, and critical remarks on the same in some cases.

I. 1. 37-38: Four Varnas in Brahman's Body. — Rgveda X. 90. 12; Mahābhārata, Āraņyaka-parvan (critical ed.), 187. 13.

I. 2. 39-40: HARA'S MALE ORGAN. — Vāyupurāņa (Ānandāśrama ed., 1905), chap. 55. 23-28. — Verse 26 mentions that they tried to measure its limits for one thousand years.

I. 3. 41-51: BIRTH OF KĪCAKAS (Bhārata of Vyāsa). — [?]. — Haribhadra specifically mentions the Bhārata of Vyāsa as his source. According to Mbh., Virāṭaparvan (critical ed.), App. I, p. 313, passage No. 19, Kekaya, a Sūta king, had from his wife Mālavī one hundred and six sons of whom Kīcaka was the most mighty and was appointed as the commander by the Virāṭa king. This is all that we learn about their origin; and in this context the legendary details noted by Haribhadra are not found. Kīcaka does mean a hollow bamboo.

I. 4. 52: Gangā Foiled in Hara's Jaṭā. — Rāmāyaṇa (Nirṇayasāgara ed. 1921), Bālakāṇḍa, 43. 9. — Haribhadra says vāsa-sahassam, while in the Rāmā. we have samvatsara-gaṇān bahūn.

I. 5. 53-7: Birth of Brahman. — Mbh., Āraņyaka-parvan (critical ed.), App. I, pp. 1084-5, passage No. 27, especially ll. 13-30. — There is some verbal agreement with the Mbh. passage; but in this context it is not mentioned that Brahman came out with Daṇḍa etc. and that the lotus was stuck, as noted by Haribhadra. According to the Vāyupurāṇa, chap. 55. 14, Brahman is equipped with Kamaṇḍalu.

I. 6. 58-84: i) TILOTTAMĀ RUINS BRAHMAN'S AUSTERITIES²; ii) BIRTH OF DROŅĀCĀRYA; iii) BIRTH OF SVEDA- AND RAKTA-KUŅDALIN; iv) KARŅĀ BORN THROUGH THE EAR (Bhārata). — i) Mbh. Ādi. (critical ed.) 201 ff. and Matsyapurāṇa (Ānandāśrama ed. 1907), Adhyā. 3. 31 f.; ii) Mbh. Ādi. (critical ed.), 57. 89, 121. 3-5, 154. 1-5; iii) Padmapurāṇa (Ānandāśrama ed. 1894), Sṛṣṭikhaṇḍa, Adhyā. 14; iv) [?]. — i) According to Ādiparvan 201 ff., Viśvakarman, at the instruction of Pitāmaha (203. 10-17), created Tilottamā, a veritable mine of jewels of beauty, for the destruction of Sunda and Upasunda.

² The legend is split up for referential convenience. A story, much similar to No. 1; is found in the Brhat Kathākośa of Harişena (Bombay 1943), chap. 99.

She was called Tilottamā, because she was made from small portion of every kind of gem. Mahādeva developed four faces to look at her as she went round (203. 23-25). According to the Matsyapurāṇa, however, Brahman created Satarūpā out of his body; and to look at her, he developed four faces (in four directions) with a fifth on the head. This temptation ruined his austerities. ii) Haribhadra attributes Droṇa's birth to Paśupati and Umā, but according to Mbh. it is attributed to Bhāradvāja and Ghṛtācī, the circumstances being similar. iii) Though the names noted by Haribhadra are not given, the Padmapurāṇa narrates a story quite similar to this in the context of the earlier births of Arjuna and Karṇa. Brahman produced a man from the perspiration of his forehead. According to the Padma., Viṣṇu offered blood from his arm. iv) Karṇa is considered to be the amsa of the Sun by whom he was generated from Kuntī (Mbh. Ādi., 57. 82, 61. 89); and his birth is described at length in the Ādi. 104. But I do not find any reference to his being born from the ear. The Mbh. mentions, however, that he was born with the Kavaca.

I. 7. 85-88: Hanumat Crosses the Ocean (Rāmāyaṇa). — Rāmāyaṇa, Sundarakāṇḍa, Sarga 1, verses 27, 54, Sarga 2, verse 2, etc. — The Rāmāyaṇa gives a graphic description how Hanumat jumps (his long arms and the root tr being more than once mentioned) across the ocean. The Sanskrit quotation put in the mouth of Hanumat I have not been able to spot in the Nirṇayasāgara ed. in this context.

I. 8. 89-92: HARA RECEIVES GANGA ON HIS HEAD. — Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, Sargas 42, 43 (verse 3f.); Mbh. Āraṇyaka., 108. 9f.; see also the remarks on I. 4. 52 above. — Mbh. simply describes how Gangā was received by Hara; and there is no reference to her vanity as in the Rāmāyaṇa.

II. 1. 27-30: Primordial Egg (Viṣṇupurāṇa¹). — Viṣṇupurāṇa, Wilson's Translation (London 1864), Book I, chap. II, pp. 39-40; Mbh. Adi. (critical ed.) 1. 27 f.; Matsyapurāṇa, 2. 32 ff.; Brahmapurāṇa (Ānandāśrama ed. 1895), 1. 40 f. — This is described almost in every Purāṇa.

II. 2. 31-39: The Whole Universe in a Child's Stomach (Aranya-parvan). — Mbh., Āranyakaparvan, 186. — The details closely agree with a few common words even. According to our text, it is the Sage that calls the Boy; but in the Mbh. the Boy calls the Sage asking him to take shelter in his stomach (verses 88-9). The Mbh. says that Mārkandeya was in the stomach of that Boy only for varṣānām adhikam śatam (verse 110); but according to Haribhadra divvam vāsa-sahassam. The Boy is none other than Viṣṇu-Kṛṣṇa, as it is clear from the names like Śrīvatsadhārin, Pītavāsā, Puṇḍarīkākṣa etc.

II. 3. 40-41: Kes'ava in Devaki's Womb. — Bhāgavata (Nirṇayasāgara ed.) 10. 7. 34-36; also the references on II. 2. 31-39 above. — When

² The Sanskrit Text (verse 106) mentions Aranyapatha, a Śāstra; but I feel no doubt that Haribhadra is referring to a Parvan of that name in the Mbh.

Yaśodā was feeding Kṛṣṇa, she happened to see the whole universe in his mouth which he opened while yawning.

II. 4. 42-50; Brahman and Kes'ava. — Compare Vāyupurāṇa, Adhyā. 24; see also the references on I. 5. 53-7. — A legend somewhat corresponding to Haribhadra's version is found in the Vāyu. Brahman once approached Nārāyaṇa who was sleeping on the great serpent in the ocean and who had produced a dignified lotus out of his navel for his sport. They do not recognise each other, and each one claims that he is the Ādikartā. First Viṣṇu enters the stomach of Brahman and sees the whole universe there, but could not reach the end even after one thousand years; so he comes out of his mouth. Then Brahman enters Viṣṇu's stomach and experiences the same. When Viṣṇu closed the outlets of his body, Brahman assumed a subtle form, came out through the lotus stalk, and took his seat on the lotus. There is some jealousy between the two; but it is quieted on Brahman being admitted as the putra of Viṣṇu (verses 57-53) born from his navel-lotus.

II. 5. 51-61: The Mighty Bow of Drupada.—Compare Mbh., Adi. (critical ed.) 174ff.—The Adi. describes the bow as drdham, anayamyam (176. 9), devadatam (foot-note p. 716, No. 1809*), samhanopapannam (178. 15). Is it that Haribhadra's Mbh. text read 178. 13 as an adjective of kārmukam in verse 15? Then alone the bow can be possessed of Nāgas etc. According to the Mbh., Kṛṣṇa and Bhīma are present at the gathering but merely as spectators. Siśupāla is humiliated, as noted by Haribhadra (Sasipālo being perhaps a misreading); but the passage concerned is found only is S (foot-note p. 725, No. 1828*) and not included in the critical text.

II. 6. 62-74: HILL-LIKE JATĀYU (Rāmāyaṇa).—Compare Rāmāyaṇa, Araṇyakāṇḍa, 50-53.—The opposition of Jaṭāyu when Rāvaṇa carried Sītā, their mutual fight, Jaṭāyu wounded by the sword of Rāvaṇa: all these events are described in the Araṇyakāṇḍa. Further that dying Jaṭāyu gives all the details to Rāma, accompanied by Lakṣmaṇa (Sarga 67), and dies in their presence. They perform the last rites (Sarga 68). According to Haribhadra, Sītā blesses Jaṭāyu that he would get wings after meeting Rāma's messenger; Hanumat, in his search for Sītā, meets Jaṭāyu who gives him all the details about her and who gets back his wings after meeting him; but I see no proper context for these in the present text of the Rāmāyaṇa of Vālmīki. Jaṭāyu is, however, qualified in the Rāmāyaṇa as parvata-śṛṅgābhaḥ (50.2). The Mbh., Āraṇyaka. (critical ed.), 262-63, which gives this episode, describes Jaṭāyu thus: Jaṭāyur giri-gocaraḥ (262.41), gṛdhraṁ nihataṁ parvatopamam (263.15).

III. 1. 21-25: RENUKA REVIVED TO LIFE.—Mbh., Aranyakaparvan (critical ed.) 116.—That the trees respected her chastity is not specifically mentioned in the Mbh. The name of the king in the Mbh. is Citraratha and not Aśvāpahṛta as given by Haribhadra.

III. 2. 26: Constitution of Jarasandha.—Mbh., Sabhāparvan (Madras 1932), Adhyāyas 19 (verses 54-55), 20 (verses 1-7). His name is explained thus: Jarayā samdhito yasmāj Jarāsamdho bhavatvayam.

III. 3. 27-37: Sunda and Nisunda Destroyed by Tilottamā.—Mbh., Ādi. (critical ed.), 201-4.—Upasunda of the Mbh. is called Nisunda by Haribhadra; perhaps it is a contamination with Nikumbha, the name of the father of Sunda and Upasunda. According to Mbh., Tilottamā was created by Viśvakarman, at the instruction of Pitāmaha, by putting together all that was beautiful in the three worlds. She was like Lakṣmī, and her body was a veritable mine of jewels (203. 12-17). Haribhadra, however, says that she was created by taking bits from gods.

III. 4. 38-44: Hanumat Pieced Together.—Compare Rāmāyaṇa, Kiṣkindhā-kāṇḍa, 66. 8-28, also Uttara—., 35-36.—Hanumat's life in his childhood is given in the Rāmāyaṇa according to which it is Indra that wounded him, while he jumped at the Sun, on the left chin whereby he came to be known as Hanumān (66. 24). The instruction of the mother that he should eat red fruits, her lamentation, smashing of his body by the Sun's kick, subsequent piecing together of the same, and the substitution of the chin: all these events, though referred to by Haribhadra, are not mentioned in the Rāmāyaṇa in the above contexts.

III. 5. 46-52: HANUMAT BRINGS WOUND-HEALING MEDICINE.—Rāmāyaṇa, Yuddha-kāṇḍa, Sarga 101, also Sarga 74 (especially verse 70) and Sarga 50.—The details noted by Haribhadra are practically covered by the above contexts in the Rāmāyaṇa.

III. 6. 53-86: BIRTH OF MAHASENA.—Compare Mbh., Aranyakaparvan (critical ed), 213-14; Brahmapurāņa, Adhyā., 128.7-23; Matsyapurāņa, chap. 158. 26f.; Vāyupurāņa, Chap. 72.—According to the Mbh., Svāhā, the daughter of Daksa, satisfied the passion of Agni by assuming the forms of the six wives of Saptarsis (excepting Arundhati, whose form she could not assume). She received the semen in hand; and with a desire that she should not be seen. she flew taking the form of a Garudī. The semen was dropped in a golden pot six times, and therein was born Mahāsena with six heads etc. He is also called Rudra's son, Rudra being identified with Agni (218. 27f.) and Svāhā with Umā (220.9). According to the Brahma- and the Matsya-purāna, Agni assumes the form of a parrot and approaches Sambhū and Umā. Agni drops semen in the Krttikās and Kārtika was thus born. Haribhadra plainly says devā gabbh'uvaghāyam vicimtamti, but the Sanskrit and Gujarāti versions indicate that gods wanted from Siva and Umā a son who would destroy Tārakāsura. Something like the legend which Haribhadra has in view is found in the Vayupurana. The text of Vayupurana admits a sad confusion of various myths about Mahāsena, but it clearly says that Indra did not want any issue to be born from Samkara and Umā; so he sent Agni to them. The concluding details are slightly different. Seeing that the semen had fallen out of her body, Umā forced Agni to hold it in his stomach; he later sought the help of Gangā who delivered in a Himālayan valley; and a mighty son was born.

III. 7. 87-88: Sun and Moon Eclipsed by Rāhu's Head.—Mbh., Adi. (critical ed.), 17. 4-8.—The corresponding story in the Mbh. runs thus: The Sun and Moon reported to Viṣṇu that Rāhu, under the guise of a god, was just drinking nectar churned from the ocean. Viṣṇu immediately cut his head which began eclipsing the Sun and Moon with enmity towards them.

Haribhadra's details are more than covered by them.

IV. 7. 31-87: The Mighty Garupa. — Mbh. Ādi. (critical ed.), 14-32. — These chapters practically cover all the details noted by Haribhadra. There are, however, some points of specific difference: The Mbh. notes only two eggs (14. 12) of Vinatā giving birth to Arupa and Garupa, while Dhū. mentions one more egg which was impatiently opened first and which produced a scorpion. Secondly, it is the mother, according to Mbh., that tells Garupa the whereabouts of the nectar and that asks him to eat Niṣādas (24. 2); but according to Haribhadra it is Kāśyapa, the father, that gives these instructions. Thirdly, the Mbh. does not connect the dropping of Vaṭa tree with Laṅkā. Lastly, Viṣṇu is quite partial to Garupa almost from the beginning in the Mbh. (129. 12f.).

V. 5. 33-37: i) Indra's Misbehaviour with Ahalyā, and ii) His Son from Kuntī. — i) Rāmāyaṇa, Bālakāṇḍa, 48. 15-28; Mbh., Anuśāsana (Bombay ed.) 41, 21; also Brahmapurāṇa Adhyā. 87. ii) Mbh., Ādi. (critical ed.) 57. 97. — According to Rāmā., Indra misbehaves with Ahalyā, the wife of Gautama who curses him to lose his testicles. According to the Mbh., he has thousands of pores on his body as a result of the curse; and they were afterwards changed to eyes. According to the Dhū., he was handed over to passionate pupils, but I do not find any such details in the above contexts. The Brahmapurāṇa, however, tells us that Indra became a cat, but was cursed by Gautama to have thousand pores (sahasra-bhagavān) on his body. When he prayed for mercy, he was blessed to be Sahasrākṣa.

² The Sanskrit and Gujarāti Texts have Anjanā for Nīlā in this context, see verse No. 336 and p. 62, l. 1.

⁴ The Sanskrit text gives the name Nahuṣa, verse 385; but the Gujarāti one Naghuṣa, p. 64. Is it that kira so is a wrong improvement on the original nahuso, being misread as na hu so?

BECOMES A BOA:—i) [?]; ii) Mbh., Āraṇyakaparvan (critical ed.), 175-178, also App. I, passages 19-20, pp. 1065f.—i) It is not clear whether Gamdhārivara refers to Dhṛtarāṣṭra; ii) The Mbh. text has undoubtedly grown, and the present text shows more than seven questions.

As distinguished from the above legends, the sources of which we have tried to trace, there are some casual references in the Dhū. (I. 62-4; V. 114-18) to Purāṇic personalities and events. Some of them are mere names; so some additional information may be noted here from second-hand sources.

Haribhadra expresses (once through the mouth of Indra) that Mahāvīra alone is an exception; and that all other so-called great personalities have been victims of cupidity and womanly temptations (I. 64-4), or of passions in general (V. iii): Gautama had a wife Ahalyā by name; at times, whenever taken as identical with Dirghatamas, he is painted to be quite voluptuous.—Vasistha had for his wives Urjā, Arundhatī etc.; and he had one hundred sons.—Parāśara, unmindful of place and time, fell in passionate love with Satyavatī, the fisher-girl.—Jamadagni demanded, from king Renu, Renukā in marriage; he had five sons from her; but he was a terribly suspicious husband.— Kasyapa had more than a dozen wives and a pretty large number of sons.— Agastya once realized that his ancestors could not be rescued without his begetting a son. Then he formed a girl out of the most graceful parts of different animals and passed her secretly into the palace of the king of Vidarbha. When the child grew up, he demanded her in marriage; somehow the king consented; and she became his wife Lopamudra. To satisfy his wife, who had grown up in palace, he begged wealth from different kings. - Indra selected Indranī to be his wife because of her voluptuous attractions; he employed celestial nymphs to excite the passions of holy men; he is called parastrikāma-cārin, a habitual adulterer; he tried to seduce Ruci, wife of Devasarman; and his endevour to seduce Ahalya, wife of the sage Gautama, is wellknown.—Hara's attachment for Umā, who occupies half of his body, is often mentioned in the Purāṇa.—Viṣṇu has his wife in Lakṣmī; and in his incarnation of Krsna, he had 16000 wives, apart from his sports with Gopis to whom he is so much attached (V. 112-13).—Candra has twenty-seven wives, of whom Rohini is the most favourite. He carried off Tara, the wife of Brhaspati, from whom he had a son Budha by name.—Vāyu generated Bhīma from Kuntī and Hanumat from Anjana. The hundred daughters of Kuśanabha would not comply with his licentious desires, so he made them crooked in physique; and thus their city came to be called Kanyā-kubja.—Yama-Dharma had several wives as Hemalatā etc. Dharma, one of the Prajāpatis, had married thirteen (or ten) of the daughters of Daksa, and had a numerous progeny. He generated Yudhişthira from Kuntī.

The following works are mainly used: A Classical Dictionary of India by J. Garret (Madras 1871) and its Supplement (Madras 1873); A Classical Dictionary of Hindu Mythology etc. by J. Dowson (London 1879); Vedic Mythology by A. A. Macdonell (Strassburg 1897); Epic Mythology by E. W. Hopkins (Strassburg 1915); Index to the Names in the Mahābhārata etc. by S. Sörensen (London 1904-25); Bhāratavarṣīya-caritrakośa by Chitrava (Poona 1932).

In conclusion, Haribhadra refers to a series of legends, particularly the births of Puranic personages (V. 114-18), and summarily denounces them as unnatural and unworthy of any credence. Some of them, viz., the births of Brahman (I. 53-7), Tilottamā (I. 58-84; III. 27-37), Drona (I. 60-61), Sanmukha (III. 53-86), and of Svedakundalin and Nara, i. e., Raktakundalin (I. 58-84) are already referred to in the earlier discussion; and we have noted the relevant sources above. Some particulars about the rest may be added here: There is a legend that (Pavana-?) Ganapati originated from the scurf of Pārvatī's body.—Urvaśī was so named, because she was born from the thigh.—Nalakūbara and Manigrīva were excessively drunk and sporting in a nude condition in the river Ganges. When Narada came there, the ladies clothed themselves; but these two remained naked. Nārada was offended, and cursed them to become trees for one hundred years. They were relieved by the contact of Kṛṣṇa who pulled the mortar, to which he was tied by his mother, through the interspace between the pair of Arjuna trees in which they were transformed.—Vasudeva and Devakī were in the prison of Kamsa, and it is there that Devakī conceived Balarāma. But in the seventh month, through the mediation of Māyā, the embryo was transferred to the body of Rohini who was staying at Gokula. This Balarama of the Yadava race is considered to be an amsa of Śesa. Pārvatī is the daughter of Himālaya and Menā.

The success of Haribhadra's performance depends primarily, if not entirely, on the intellectual integrity and fidelity with which he has presented the Purāṇic legends that are being satirised. We can start prima facie that he would not dare to change the popular, mythological stories, at least their fundamentals, current in his locality and at his time; for, if he were to do so, he would be cutting the very ground under his feet, and his work would fall in the estimation of his contemporaries to whose gathering it has been already narrated at Citrakūṭa (V. 123).

On the whole, we have been fairly successful in tracing the counterparts of the legends, quoted by Haribhadra, to their sources available today. Haribhadra is not actually quoting in the very words of the original, but he is rewriting the legends in his words and mostly from memory. Naturally we will have to make ample concession for omissions and minor variations in expression and presentation. In some cases, Haribhadra's legends, when studied in comparison with those in the present-day texts, show differences in details. Their significance depends upon their position in the story and on their relative bearing for the purpose of denunciation. Some divergences are of minor significance: for instance, the names of the parents of Drona (I. 6); whether the Sage called the Boy or vice versa (II. 2); whether Renuka's chastity was respected by plants (III. 1); whether Upasunda or Nisunda is the name (III. 3); whether Vinatā laid two eggs or three (IV. 7); whether Yudhisthira asked the boa seven questions or more (V. 8); etc. Such differences do not affect the chief idea that is selected as the target for the satirical shaft. There are other differences of major significance: for instance, whether, according to the Purāṇic legend, Kīcakas were accommodated in and born from bamboo-hollows (I. 3); whether the lotus was caught stuck at Viṣṇu's navel (I. 5); whether Karṇa was born through the ear (I. 6); whether Drupada's bow is described in the epic to contain Nāgas etc. (II. 5); whether Hanumat climbed the mountain-like Jaṭāyu (II, 6); etc. If these events have no basis in the Purāṇic stories, the very edge of Haribhadra's criticism is blunted; and his denunciation of Purāṇic legends becomes impertinent.

Before we raise the question, whether Haribhadra has really taken liberty with some of the legends, we have to remember that our epics and Puranas have not come down to us exactly in the same form in which they were current at the time of Haribhadra. Their texts have been subjected to so many vicissitudes in different localities and for centuries together that the authenticity of every episode, nay of every passage, is to be judged on its own merits. This is fully demonstrated by the critical edition of the Mahābhārata. The condition of the text-tradition of the Purānas is much worse. They present such an indiscriminate fusion of text-tradition and such a bewildering medley of myths that the wits of a text-critic would be completely stunned. Very good results have been achieved by the study of Mbh. Mss.; and the late lamented Dr. V. S. Sukthankar has brilliantly sketched the pros and cons of the text-variation in the Mbh. in his following observations: "All the difficulties in the explanation of this phenomenal variation vanish, however, as soon as we assume that the epic was handed down from bard to bard originally by word of mouth, as is clearly implied by tradition. That would explain, without any strain or violence, the existence of the mass of variants, of differences in sequence and of additions and omissions. If the text has been preserved, for any considerable period of time, only in memory and handed down by word of mouth, those are just the changes that could not possibly be avoided. It is evident that no great care would be lavished on the text by these custodians of the tradition to guard it against corruption and elaboration, or against arbitrary emendation and normalization: to reproduce the received text, which was not guarded by canonical authority or religious sanction, with any degree of precision would be neither attempted by the bards nor required of them. Whenever and wherever the text was then written down—and it was probably written down independently in different epochs and under different circumstances—these transmissions by word of mouth must have contaminated the written text and innumerable variations in it. The assumption of some such complicated derangement, beyond the normal vicissitudes of transmission, is necessary to account for the abnormal discrepancies and strange vagaries of the Mahābhārata manuscript tradition. In other words, we are compelled to assume that even in its early phases the Mahābhārata textual tradition must have been not uniform and simple, but multiple and polygenous." In another context Dr. V. S. Sukthankar has observed thus with regard to citations; and what is true about them nearly holds good with regard to legends and their contents¹: "Then in the case of citations we must allow for failures of memory, and the quotation was never compared with the original. Moreover we must never forget that probably from time immemorial there have existed local versions of the Mahābhārata. The citations made even by very old writers were from these local versions. A citation by a writer of the eighth century or even the sixth century proves nothing for the Ur-Mahābhārata, that ideal but impossible desideratum; though the citation is far older than our manuscripts, it is evidence only for the text of the local Mahābhārata in the eighth, respectively in the sixth century, notwithstanding that the differences between the various recensions and versions of the Mahābhārata must diminish as we go back further and further."

No doubt there must have been Mss. of the epics and Purānas (III. 53) in the days of Haribhadra, but generally the narratives were heard from the mouth of rhapsodists. That they were handed down by word of mouth, as suggested by Sukthankar, is to a very great extent confirmed by the fact that, whenever Haribhadra appeals to the authority of Puranas etc., he uses almost uniformly terms like suvvaï, suam, etc. (I. 35, 41; II. 27, 31, 61; III. 27, 38, 53, 63, 93; IV. 19, 27; V. 11, 33, 37, 60, 64, 112, 114; etc.). It is not unlikely, therefore, that some discrepancies in the details, whether minor or major, might go back to the traditional narration which was recited round about Citrakūta at the time of Haribhadra; and we can hardly hope to trace the same necessarily in the present-day texts. It is equally possible, in some cases where Haribhadra's statements show deviation from the sources, that he is criticising the legends which passed as such according to the tradition from which he got them. One cannot be dogmatic on one or the other explanation, because the sources, so far tapped, are comparatively limited. Further, when legends are quoted from memory, contamination, confusion and variation in details are inevitable. The very fact that most of the legends or their nearest counterparts we have been able to trace to their sources clearly indicates that Haribhadra did not want to put forth imaginary legends and then to condemn them. Though it is quite plain, it may be noted that the sources recorded by us do not indicate that all those works are necessarily older than Haribhadra, but it only means that those legends belong to a period earlier than that of Haribhadra. He mentions only three works by name, Bhārata, Rāmāyaṇa and Visnupurāna; and all other sources are our suggestions.

At times there is no agreement even among the Purānic legends. For instance, according to one version, Agni was sent by gods to Siva and Umā for a mighty son who can destroy Tārakāsura; while, according to another version, though less popular, he was sent by Indra to prevent Umā from conceiving a child. Haribhadra narrates clearly the latter version, though the Sanskrit and Gujarāti versions of the Dhū. read there, wrongly of course, the popular legend. The legend given by Haribhadra has its place in the present-day Vāyupurāṇa, as noted above. It is interesting to note that, in some cases

(I.5; II. 5; IV. 3), the details of the legends are more specifically traced in the additional passages recorded in the foot-notes and Appendix of the critical edition of the Mbh. That only means, the recension of the Mbh. which reached Haribhadra's ears was more inflated than our critical text which is constituted according to well-established and judiciously evolved canons of text criticism based on the available Mss.

Some of the legends quoted by Haribhadra appear to have been pieced together from different sources, even with mutual contamination (I. 6; III. 3). It is creditable to Haribhadra that the number of such cases is quite small. This is inevitable in those days when one had to depend mainly on memory, which was a storehouse of all traditional lore, and not on books, as we do today.

Among the legends, the sources of which Haribhadra has clearly mentioned, some are found in the present-day texts with substantial agreement in details (I. 7; II. 1, 2; III. 9 V. 7); but in three cases (I. 3, 6; II. 6), though the sources are given as Bhārata and Rāmāyana, we do not find any passages in the present-day texts to support Haribhadra. That Karna was born from Kunti's ear is a common story, quite popular even to this day, though not found in the Mbh.; and it is not surprising, if it was current in the days of Haribhadra too. First, karna means the ear, and popular etymology would certainly weave out such a story; secondly, there is as well a psychological motive, namely, by Karna's birth through the ear Kunti's virginity remains intact, his generation by Surva being after all miraculous, nay supernatural. Though Mbh. makes no mention of such a legend, I think, the birth of Kīcakas from kīcakas or bamboo-hollows is similarly based on popular etymology; such a legend might have been current in the days of Haribhadra; and it is quite in tune with a host of legends in the epics and Purānas with which the 'miraculous germination of the semen into human beings' is a regular apparatus for the generation of the great men of the past about whose birth nothing exciting was specially known to the chronicler'. Coming to the episode of Jatayu, the epics do mention the mountain-like shape of Jatayu; and thereby Haribhadra's purpose is served. But the details of the story cannot be fitted in the present mould of Vālmīki's Rāmāyana. Haribhadra is quoting a Sanskrit verse1 in that context; and it would indicate that he has some definite source before him.

My observations on the sources of Haribhadra's legends, I am quite aware, are tentative; and I hope that those scholars, who have better library facilities at their disposal and who have a closer study of the Purāṇas, would try to shed more light on this topic.

5. Sanskrit and Gujarāti Dhūrtākhyānas

The Sanskrit version of the Dhūrtākhyāna, included in this edition, is extracted from the Tattvakaumudī which is a Vivarana or Vrtti by Sanghatilaka on the Samyaktvasaptatikā², attributed to Haribhadra³ himself. The prasasti of the Vrtti4 gives a good bit of information about Sanghatilaka and his predecessors in the ascetic line. It opens with the glorification of Candragaccha to which belonged the following teachers: Vardhamāna, Jineśvara, Abhayadeva I (rangan navângī-mahāvrtti-Stambhana-Pārsvanātha-jinarāţ-mūrti-prakāsaikakṛt the author of the commentaries on the nine Angas, [who became a Sūri in Samvat 1088 or 1031 A. D.])5, Jinavallabha, Jinasekhara, Padmacandra, Vijayacandra, Abhayadeva II (from whom started the Rudrapalliya-gaccah) Devabhadra, Prabhānanda, Śrīcandra & Vimalacandra, Gunasekhara and lastly Sanghatilaka, the author of Tattvakaumudī. Sanghatilaka had his vidyā-guru in Jinaprabha⁶ whose erudition had pleased, Sāhi Mahammada at Dhillī⁷. He composed the Vrtti at the request of Devendra who was an anuja of Somatilaka, an eminent pupil of Sanghatilaka himself. It was composed at Sarasvatapattana (Pāṭaṇa?) [and finished] during Dīpotsava (i. e., October-November) in the year 1422 (śrimad-Vikrama-vatsare dvi nayanâmbhodhi-kṣapākṛt prame) of the Vikrama era, i. e., -57 = 1365 A. D.

This Sanskrit Dhūrtākhyāna is neither a Chāyā nor a literal and studious metrical rendering or paraphrase of the Prākrit original, though it is solely based on it. Saṅghatilaka, there is not the least doubt, has the Prākrit text of Haribhadra before him; he is trying to present its contents, in simple Sanskrit verses, with sufficient closeness and strictly adhering to the same

- 1 This is published by the Devachandra Lālabhāi Jaina Pustakoddhāra Fund, No. 35, Bombay 1916. This copy reached my hands rather late, so some details I have noted in the foot-notes.
- 2 This Sk. Dhūrtākhyāna forms a part of the commentary on verse No. 12 which runs thus: मोहिज्जइ मंदमई कुदिद्विवयणेहिँ गुविल्डंडेहिं। दूरेण विज्ञवन्दा तेण इमे मुद्धवृद्धीहिं॥ १२॥. The story is introduced with this remark: एतदर्थसत्यापनार्थ वैश्रमणश्रेष्टिद्धान्तो मूल्देवादिपञ्चभूतेस्वरूपीपलक्षितः प्रतन्यते, तथाहि— समस्ति etc. At the close there are 28 verses more than what is printed here; they have nothing to do with Dhū. proper. They tell us that Vaiśramaṇa, by hearing all this from Susthita, developed firm Samyaktva. He accepted the vows of a householder. His wife also accepted ratna-traya-dharma. Even when his wife was troubled by a Vyantarī, Vaiśramaṇa's faith in Jina was unshaken. In due course he attained liberation. The concluding portion runs thus: इत्यं वैश्रमणस्य चारु चिति श्रुत्वा श्रुतिभीणकं, मा रामायणमारतश्रुतिभवेवांक्येविंचाराक्षमेः। मालिन्यं नयतातिनिमेल्जमं सद्दर्शनं पावनं, येन स्थ्रभवतां जिनागमविदां दार्भश्रियः सुस्थिराः॥ ४५५॥ [इति] कुदर्शनवर्जनविषये वेश्रमणक्ष्या।।. This edition of the commentary does not give any chapter headings or endings. Saṅghatilaka does not appear to have mentioned either Haribhadra or the name of the work, Dhūrtākhyāna.

sequence of narration; and he attempts to include most of the ideas from the original, at times in identical expressions (Pk. I. 76, Sk. 66 etc.). He is more after narrating the story with as few secondary details as possible. Whenever there are lengthy descriptions in the Prākrit text, he either summarises them or adds his own with a bit of independence. It may be that even metrical exigencies have frustrated his attempts to be more close and literal in his rendering. Sometimes he expresses the original with remarkable compactness (verses 82, 103, etc.) and in a few cases with elegance and beauty (125, etc.). He shows that he is fairly acquainted with the details of Puranic mythology: the proper names are freely substituted by other synonyms (Svāmin = Skanda, Mahāsena = Şanmukha, etc.); once an additional source, Bhārata (102) is rightly added; and sometimes are added supplementary details, such as, the names Dhūmornā and Nahuşa (verses 351, 385) and the birth of Kārtikeya for the destruction of Tārakāsura (204 f.). Sometimes his references to the sources are not quite to the point (169) and in one place (106) it is a bit obscure.

Perhaps a verse between Nos. 86¹ and 87 is missing. Possibly in his zeal of summarising the story, Sanghatilaka skips over certain portions of the Prākrit text, viz., I. 30-4, V. 115 f. The contents of some verses, for instance, III. 83, V. 80, are not fully covered: the latter, it may be noted presents some difficulties of interpretation. The legend of Varāha lifting the earth (III. 10) is missed by him, somewhere between verses 236-38. As to the quotations in the original, it appears that the author wants to present his text purely in Sanskrit: some of the Prākrit quotations (II. 50, III. 67) are nicely rendered into Sanskrit (125, 215); some of those in Sanskrit are duly reproduced; but it is difficult to say why some (II. 73, IV. 92, V. 4, 5, 103) are skipped over without any trace.

More than once Sanghatilaka not only shows difference in ideas but also adds new ideas, when compared with the Prākrit original (see for instance: Nos. 21d, 23d, 159b, 161d, 199d, 204b, 239d, 242d, 243d, 316ab, 409d, 416d, etc.). Some of these are apt similes, quite creditable to any poet.

There are many places where one can easily take exception to Sanghatilaka's rendering of the original: lhasiya-celam (I. 60) = dūṣita-vāsasam (52); seam (I. 74) = seṣam (64); Sea-kumḍalī nāma² (I. 75) = Sitakunḍali-nāmā (65); namiūna Jiṇavarimdam (II. 24) = nṛpatim natvā (99)³; phuṭṭam du-bhāga-jāyam (II. 29) = trividhatām agamat (104); etc. His statement that the progeny of Gautī and Śamkara was required for destroying Tāraka (203-4), though quite in agreement with a Purānic tradition, is contradictory to the explicit statement of Haribhadra (III. 55) who follows a slightly different tradition.

² The Gujarāti text reads S'vetakundalī nāmi.

On account of its being a part of the commentary, the opening and concluding portions of the Sanskrit Dhūrtākhyāna do not give it an appearance of a self-sufficient unit. More than once, it comes to our help in clearly understanding the Prākrit text of Haribhadra².

The Dhūrtākhyāna in Old-Gujarātī, included in this edition, mentions at its close that it was written (liṣitam) or copied by Pt. Lakṣmīkīrti, the pupil of Ratnasundaragaṇi of the Jinamāṇikya-śākhā of the Kharatara-gaccha at Udaipura in Samvat 1758 (-57 = 1701 A.D.), Kārtika Šukla, 12, Saturday. The word liṣitam should ordinarily mean 'copied'; so this proof is not enough to infer that Lakṣmīkīrti is the author of this Gujarāti work. In fact, we do not know the name of its author; and all that we can say about him is this much: he flourished earlier than 1701 A.D.; he had realised that the Dhūrtākhyāna was an effective attack against the Purāṇic religion and the Purāṇas; and he wrote the tales, from the Dhūrtākhyāna of Haribhadra, in the loka-bhāṣā, that they might be intelligible to laymen (bālāvabodha-rūpāḥ kathāḥ).

The author's primary aim is to narrate the stories included by Haribhadra in his Dhū. He closely follows the Prākrit text, and mainly concentrates his attention on narrating the stories, ignoring the mosaic descriptions of Haribhadra and spicy similes of Sanghatilaka. At times his rendering is quite literal. To make the narration effective, he amplifies the original by additional remarks (p. 49, ll. 19, 22-3; p. 60, ll. 5-6; p. 64, ll. 21-23; etc.). Some verses in the Prākrit (III. 83, V. 80) are not duly covered, and some details (V. 115 f.) are disposed off summarily. Partly agreeing with Sanghatilaka, some quotations are not included (II. 73, IV. 92, V. 4, 5, 18, 103). Somehow I. 87*1 is quoted with some different readings.

There is not the least doubt that the author is mainly following the Prākrit text: his Gujarāti rendering, as a rule and throughout the work, agrees more with Prākrit original than with the Sanskrit version of Sanghatilaka; two quotations (II. 50, III. 67) which are rendered into Sanskrit by Sanghatilaka, are quoted in Prākrit, as in the original, by our author (pp. 54, 57); and one legend, III. 10, omitted by the Sk. text, is duly given by him (p. 58). Though the Prākrit text is mainly and closely followed, there is sufficient proof to indicate that he has consulted the Sanskrit text of Sanghatilaka. Many points and remarks, which are not found in the Prākrit but are present in the Sanskrit text, are seen in this Gujarāti version. At I. 35 Haribhadra has Bhārahe purāņe a; Sanghatilaka has in the corresponding passage (29) S'rī-Rāmāyanā-Bhārate; and the Guja. text has Bhārata Rāmāyanādika granthe (p. 50, l. 24). This is perhaps the only reference, in the first two chapters, indicating explicitly the influence of the Sk. text. From the third chap, pnwards we see more of this influence, and even some phrases here and there remind us of the Sk. text: Pk. dhāivvāya-pisāena (III. 1), Sk. dhātuvādādyair vyasanaih (150), Guj. dhātuvādādika vyasanai (p. 55); Pk. no specific number, Sk. stenāh pañca satīmitāh (159), Guj. pāmca sai caura (p. 56); etc¹. Then in describing the origin of Skanda (p. 57) to destroy Tārakāsura, the Gujarāti version closely follows the Sk. text, so also in supplying the names of Dhūmorṇā Nahuṣa, etc. Thus the writer of the Guj. Dhūrtākhyāna has used Sanghatilaka's work here and there.

² In continuation of what my friend Dr. A. M. Ghatage has said (New Indian Antiquary, I, 5, August 1938), I might record here that Sanghatilaka uses the form muthalāpya (334, 394), gerundive from the root muthalāp; and it stands once for āucchiūna, 'having taken leave' (V. 9), and once for pucchium, 'having taken permission' (V. 74) in the original Prākrit.

The author claims that these stories are being written in loka-bhāsā which means the popular language (current, say roughly, in Northern Gujarāta, sometime before 1701 A. D.) as distinguished from the literary languages like Sanskrit, Prākrit and even Apabhramśa. The author, it is clear, is well-versed in Pakrit and Sanskrit; and inevitably the large sprinkling of Sanskrit words. seen in these stories, is due more to the author's command over Sk. vocabulary than to the actual usage of the contemporary loka-bhāṣā. This inference is quite natural when we look at the percentage of pure Sanskrit words in any modern Indian language as used by a Sastrin, or even an educated man, and an illiterate villager. Loan words are an unsafe evidence in understanding the essential grammatic structure of any loka-bhāṣā, because they can be easily grafted anywhere; and it is all the more true in the case of religious books whose topics were usually described in Sanskrit terms. So the loka-bhāṣā, or Old-Gujarāti. in which our author wrote could not have contained so many Sk. words; and we should study its nature by taking into account declensional forms, verbal formations, particles etc. An exhaustive study of the language cannot be attempted here; but I would simply note a few formations which are interesting to a student of Apabhramsa and post-Apabhramsa stages especially in Rajasthana and Gujarāta. Nominal forms: joyana, thāma 'a place', tarasī 'thirst', pāyaka 'a foot-soldier', be strīu, bhojāīo (Pk. bhāijjāyā), māchinī 'a fisher woman', rātā phala 'red fruits'. Pronominal forms: tum, mujha, hum (also hume) etc. Particles: jima, piņa 'also, but', v. l. paņi (p. 50, l. 11, foot-note 13), ma, hethāi, hethi, v. l., hethum. Verbal forms: ūpanā, kahau, chaï, joum, jovaï, dājhato, paithum, paisūm, parani, paranai, bīha, bhāgo, mūo, mokalajyo, lāgo, sakai, humto, etca.

² It is interesting to compare these forms with those recorded in the Index of A Study of the Gujarāti Language by T. N. Dave, London 1935. The prose commentary in Old Gujarāti (on the Upadeśamālā) on which Dr. Dave's study is based is called Bālāvabodha; and it may be noted that the Gujarati version of the Dhū. also bears the same name.

The above illustrations are picked up at random, and there is no pretension to an exhaustive study. Apart from the large number of Sanskrit loan words, this loka-bhāṣā shows many words used in Prākrits; and some of the particles are the same as those in Apabhramśa. The pronouns and verbal formations of the Apabh. stage have undergone a great deal of change which is natural and unavoidable in the evolution of spoken languages. Some changes are just a matter of shifting pronunciation: kahaü>kahau, dajjhanto >dājhato, mokkalijjaü>mokalajyo, sakkaï>sakai, etc. Rājasthānī and Gujarāti are more lucky than any other modern Indian language because of their rich heritage of earlier stages of the language; and a careful study of the texts, from century to century, would certainly demonstrate the evolution of these languages through Prākrit, Apabhramśa and post-Apabh. stages of the Middle Indo-Aryan.

The Sanskrit and Gujarāti Dhūrtākhyānas cannot be judged as original contributions like their Prākrit counterpart; they definitely indicate, however, that the performance of Haribhadra did appeal to subsequent generations; and, as they stand today, they are useful aids to understand and check the Prākrit text of Haribhadra.

6. Dhūrtākhyāna and Dharma-parīkṣā

We come across a pretty large number works called Dharma-parīkṣā (Dp.)1. Most of them are not critically examined as yet. It is Amitagati's Dp. that has been exhaustively studied2, and it can be accepted as a representative of Dp. texts for all practical purposes. Vrttavilāsa, Padmasāgara and others have mechanically followed Amitagati's Dp. By the discovery of Harisena's Dp. (Samvat 1044,-56 = A. D. 988), which was written 26 years earlier than that of -Amitagati (Samvat 1070, -56 = A. D. 1014), it is clear now that Amitagati is not the creator of the plot of Dp. Amitagati tells us that he composed his work in two months3: no doubt, he is a gifted didactic poet with a flowing Sanskrit style; but he does not mention his predecessors. Harişena, however, frankly says that the Dp. which was formerly composed by Jayarama in Gatha metre is now composed by him in Paddhadiyā metre. Unfortunately Jayarāma's Dp. has not come to light so far. Harisena's Dp. is in Apabhramsa; there is no conclusive evidence to establish that Amitagati solely followed Harisena; the plot of the story, adopted by both Harisena and Amitagati, is remarkably identical; what Harisena says would indicate that almost all his material was present in Jayarāma's Dp.; and Amitagati's Sanskrit expression betrays Prākritisms in narrative portions. All these facts go to indicate that Jayarāma's work was in Gāthā metre, the language being Saurasenī or Māhārāṣṭrī; and for the present we might presume that the plot of Dp. owes its birth to Jayarāma.

¹ See my paper 'Harisena's Dharma-parīkṣā in Apabhramśa' in the Silver Jubilee Number, Annals of the B. O. R. I., vol. XXIII, pp. 592-608.

² N. Mironow: Die Dharma-parīksā des Amitagati, Leipzig 1903.

³ The Sanskrit text with Hindi translation has been published by Pannalal Bakaliwal, Bombay 1901; another edition giving the Marāthi translation of Pt. Bahubali Sharma has appeared lately, Sangli 1931. One feels the necessity of a critical edition of Amitagati's text.

Comparing the works of Harisena and Amitagati one finds that, so far as the the events of the plot and their sequence are concerned, both of them are in close agreement. This indicates that Amitagati has not taken much liberty with the structure of the plot. Harisena's text is not available in print; so I give below the analysis of the narrative structure of Amitagati's Dp. which would enable us to compare and contrast the two works, Dhū. and Dp.

In Jambūdvīpa, on the southern range of Vijayārdha, in the town named Vaijavantī, there lived a Vidyādhara king Jitasatru and his queen Vāyuvegā who had a son Manovega, endowed with faith in Jina's doctrines. His friend Pavanavega, prince of Priyapuri, had no such faith; and he was much worried on that account. Once returning from his visit to Jina-temples, his vimāna stopped at Ujjainī, in Mālava; and in its northern park there was an omniscient monk, Jinamati, on whom he waited with reverence. Jinamati expounded to the audience the proportion of pleasure and pain in samsāra with the explanation of madhu-bindu-dṛṣṭānta and the consequences of religious and irreligious life. Manovega asked Jinamati whether his friend Pavanavega would possess samyaktva; and he got a reply that he could enlighten his friend by taking him to Pātaliputra. Pavanavega was anxious to meet his friend Manovega whom he met on the way to the joy of both. Manovega told him how he visited various Jaina holy places and came to Pātaliputra, a prosperous centre of Brahmanic ritual and learning. Payanavega expresses his impatience to visit Pāṭaliputra, and next morning both of them reached there and got down in the park.

I. Both of them, though decked with ornaments, assumed the form of faggot-grass-sellers. It was a surprising sight to one and all who began to speculate about them. They reached the Brahma-śālā, bet the drum, and sat on the golden seat. At this challenge, Brāhmaṇas rushed forth for dispute. They wondered at their splendour and grace, and almost mistook them for gods. On being pointedly questioned, Manovega, requesting them not to be irritated, told them that all that they did was out of mere curiosity and that they were mere grass-selling boys whose prototypes were found in Bhārata stories. One Brāhmaṇa asked: 'How can there be grass-faggot-sellers decorated with jewels? If such cases are found in the Rāmāyaṇa

Mironow follows the rule 'divide et impera' and presents the summaries of various stories separately. The method is admirable and quite suited for studying the stories. But the analysis of disjoined stories does not clearly bring out the effect of entire work, especially of the fantastic tales and the bearing of subsequent legends on their points. Just to bring out this aspect of Dp. clearly, I have added here a bit detailed summary. Those who want more particulars about individual stories may either consult the original Sk. text or Mironow's dissertation, and Bhārata, we would like to hear them.' Manovega said that he would explain everything, if there are any thoughtful (vicāraka) among them; otherwise his fate would be like that of Madhukara who received 16 strokes for telling the truth about the heaps of pepper and grains in different parts of the country. The leader assured him that they were all thoughtful Brāhmanas. Further Manovega told them that he feared to speak, if any of them belonged to the following ten types of men (about whom ten stories are narrated): 1) rakta, a passionate husband duped by his younger wife; 2) dvista, who wants his son to take revenge on his enemy by using his dead body: 3) mūdha, a silly priest outwitted by his unchaste wife and pupil; 4) vyudgrāhin, a blind block-head prince; 5) pitta-dūsita, a bilious fellow mistaking sweet as sour; 6) cūta, a wreckless king who pulled out the mango tree; 7) ksīra, a foolish Tomara chief who illtreated a milch cow; 8) aguru, an ignoramus who could not understand the value of aguru plantation; 9) candana, a washerman incapable of recognising sandal; and 10) bālisa: Four fools, once upon a time, saluted a Jaina saint, endowed with various religious and ascetic virtues, who uttered the blessing 'dharma-vṛddhi'. They began to quarrel as to whom it was meant for; and when they asked the monk, he told them that it was meant for him who was decided to be the most foolish by the wise people of the town after hearing their biographies. 10a) Visameksana narrated thus: 'One day I was sleeping with my two wives on both sides. Just for joke, I placed the lamp on my forehead. A mischevous rat pulled the burning wick, and one of my eyes was scorched. Afraid of disturbing my wives, I allowed my eye to be burnt.' 10b) Kuntahamsagati spoke thus: 'Rksī and Kharī are my most ugly wives; their mutual jealous abuse and quarrel made me lose both my legs: and being afraid of them, I tolerated all this.' 10c) Bota (or Boda) said thus: 'I had been to my father-in-law. At night, I had a bet with my wife that one who speaks first should give a rich feast. A thief entered the house and collected all the treasure. He began stripping my wife of her clothes on the body. I kept quiet. She began to abuse me at the loss of wealth and at her insult. I at once told her that she lost the game by speaking first, and she should give the feast now.' 10d) Gallasphotika told his tale thus: 'I had gone to the house of my father-in-law. Out of bashfulness and seeing some hedious sight, I did not take my meals. As time passed, I was overpowered by hunger. I was just gulping a handful of fine rice kept in a basket below the cot when my wife came there, and I could not swallow them. My mouth was full to the brim; I could not speak; and my cheeks grew hard. There was a great row, and different explanations were offered about my disease. A skilful physician diagnosed my trouble, calling it tanduliya ailment; he quietly bored my cheeks and took out rice particles. Thus I made myself an object of ridicule.' After hearing these tales, the Brāhmaṇas assured Manovega that none from them belonged to any of the ten types and that he should answer their question. Manovega spoke thus: 'Vișnu is a mighty divinity, full of glory, grace and power; then how is it that he stayed as a cowherd-boy at Gokula sporting in various ways, that he became a messenger of Pāṇḍavas and a charioteer of Arjuna, that he begged at Bali's door, and that he suffered from Sītā's separation? If that divine Viṣṇu could do mean acts, what is wrong in our selling grass and faggots? The Brāhmaṇas felt disillusioned; and they could see how god Viṣṇu was exposed to so many blemishes and inconsistencies, and how Purāṇas were full of contradictions.

II. Second time Manovega became a rough hunter, and his friend, a cat without ears, put in a pot. They met Brāhmaṇas as before, and told them how the cat had the power of warding off rats at miles' distance and that it was for sale. Brāhmaṇas realized its utility and were ready to buy it at the quoted price. On examination, however, it was found that it was devoid of ears which, Manovega explained, were eaten by ferocious rats one night. Brāhmaṇas laughed at his daring contradiction. Manovega refused to admit that the single flaw of not having ears spoiled all other virtues of the cat. The Brāhmaṇas assured him that they were not 'Frogs in the Well'; but they questioned him straight: 'How can this flaw of the cat be tolerated?'

Manovega then narrated the legend of passionate Agni (or of Yama and Chāyā): 'The ascetic Mandapakauśika feared that he might lose heaven for want of progeny, so he married a widow from whom he had a beautiful daughter Chāyā by name. While going on piligrimage, he just thought to what god he should entrust his daughter who would not be able to stand the strain of journey. He began scrutinizing the acts and character of different gods: Īśvara is extremely passionate; Hari is not satisfied with 16 thousand Gopīs; Brahman was mad after Tilottamā and lost his head, and once he generated Jāmbava from a bear; and Indra misbehaved with Ahalyā. All these gods are victims of cupid. So he kept Chāyā with Yama who too, as days passed, fell in love with her and always carried her in his stomach. Agni was jealous of Yama's prize. One day when Yama had taken her out on the bank of Ganges, Agni mated with her. Just at that moment Yama came there. She swallowed Agni, and Yama swallowed her. Agni was missing to the distress of all. At last Vāyu managed to expose both Chāyā and Agni. Agni tried to conceal himself when pursued by Yama. If Agni can still be a god with all this blemish, my cat's virtues can remain intact without ears.' Brāhmaņas admitted that Purānas were inconsistent. Manovega further pointed out the blemishes of Samkara, Visnu, Brahman, Indra, Yama, Agni, Sun, etc.

III. Third time Manovega assumed the form of a nude Jaina monk; and accompained by Pavanavega, he met Brāhmaṇas as before. They assured him that they were not like that king of Campā who illtreated his truth-speaking minister, and requested him to narrate how he became a monk etc. Manovega spoke thus: 'My father is Munidatta, a Śrāvaka from Śrīpura; and he entrusted me to an ascetic for study. Once I was sent out with the Kamaṇḍalu to bring water, but I sat playing with it on the road. Having learnt from other pupils that the teacher was angry, I ran towards the town. On the way a mountain-like elephant rushed against me. Helpless and terrified I entered into the Kamandalu which was placed on the branch of bhinda; the elephant also rushed into it, and began tearing my clothes with its trunk. I ran out through the spout; the elephant also followed me; but with its tail stuck there, it fell on the ground. I reached a Jaina temple, and not getting ctothes I accepted this traditional form of a Jaina monk.' The Brāhmaṇas laughed at him as a fantastic lier telling impossibilities. When they assured him to abandon such scriptures as contained these details. he narrated to them the following episodes: Arjuna brought the Nāgaloka through an arrow-hole; Agastya drank the whole ocean, and his Kamandalu containing the universe was put on the branch of an atasi plant; and Brahman's hair was caught at Vișnu's navel when the former came out of latter's stomach after seeing there the universe which was once missing. If these legends are true, it is quite possible that the elephant could pass through the Kamandaluhole, be accommodated in the Kamandalu, and have it's tail stuck in the spout. The Brāhmanas were thus silenced; and they were further instructed by him on the faults of divinities and on the true nature of God.

IV. Fourth time Manovega became a Tāpasa, and accompanied by his friend, met the Brāhmaņas as before. On condition that they are quite considerate, he narrated his tale thus: 'At the time of my mother's marriage there was a confusion created by an elephant. She rushed out with the bridegroom at whose touch she fell in a swoon, but he ran away. It was discovered that she was pregnant due to his touch. Hearing of a 12 years' famine from Tāpasas, I remained in the womb all the while and came out when the famine was over. As soon as I was born, I took a pot and demanded food. It was considered ominous; and I had to leave home and become a Tapasa like this. My mother was righlty married again, as though she tried to follow Draupadi's example. I came here on my religious tour.' The Brāhmanas said that he was a first-rate lier talking impossible things; they admitted that they were open to correction, if such details were found in their Scriptures. Manovega, to confirm his experience, narrated the following legends: Bhagiratha was conceived at women's mutual contact; Gandhārī became pregnant by embracing a jackfruit tree; Abhimanyu understood cakra-vyūha while he was in the womb; Mandodarī conceived at the contact of her father's semen, had her foetus restrained in the womb for seven thousand years, and delivered Indrajit after being married to Rāvaṇa; Vyāsa accepted renunciation immediately after his birth, and his mother remained still a virgin; Kuntī remained a kanyā even after begetting a son from the Sun; and Candramatī was still a kanyā after Nāgaketu's birth and was married to Uddālaka. If these Purānic legends are true, there is nothing incredible in my mother conceiving me at her beloved's touch, in my hearing about the famine from the womb, in my remaining there for twelve years, in my becoming an ascetic soon after my birth, and in my mother becoming again a kanyā after delivering me.' Manovega further enlightened Pavanavega and all others there by narrating the true tales about Karna, Vyāsa Pāndavas, etc. He illustrated to them how people mechanically and thoughtlessly follow others, as in that story of the Copper Pot.

V. Fifth time Manovega, along with Pavanavega, became a Buddhist monk (rakta-paṭa); and on being assured by Brāhmaṇas that they were thoughtful, he narrated his wonderful experience: 'We are devotees of Buddhist monks. Once with sticks in our hands we were appointed by them to guard their clothes spread in sun-shine. Two terrific jackals came there, and we mounted the Stūpa with fear; they, however, lifted it up, and flew away speedily. When they dropped us with a view to devour us, there arrived Bhillas with dogs; and the jackals ran away. As we were in an unknown country, we easily became Buddhist monks.' Brāhmaṇas wondered at his astonishing lies; but he reminded them of the following legend: According to the Rāmāyaṇa, each monkey lifted five mountains. If this is true, two jackals can easily lift a Stūpa.

VI. At last Manovega and Pavanavega became Svetāmbara monks (sveta-bhikṣu) and met the Brāhmanas who asked them why they became monks and who was their guru. Manovega continued in reply: 'Once our father Arunaśrika sent us into the forest to graze the sheep, because the shepherd had to attend his father who was down with fever. I requested my companion to tend the sheep, so that in the meanwhile I might eat some kapittha fruits. desire for fruits was very strong, but the tree was too tall. I went near, cut my head, and threw it on the tree requesting it to eat the fruits; as it ate fruits on the tree, my stomach was getting full below; and when I was satisfied, the head came down and joined the body as before. I looked for my brother, but found him asleep and all the sheep lost. We feared that our father would beat us; so we went away to a distant territory and accepted this comfortable garb.' Manovega further confirmed to the Brāhmanas the truth of his experience by narrating the following legends: Cutting his nine heads Rāvaņa offered them to Sambhū, and these were again joined to his body; Dadhimukha's head could get itself joined with another's trunk; parts of Angada's body were joined by Hanumat; Jarāsamdha's body was constituted of different parts; Skanda's person was made up of six portions; and when the priests are fed, the ancestors are satisfied. If all this, narrated in Brahmanic scriptures, is true, there is nothing improbable in my own head joining the body, and in my stomach being filled when my mouth eats kapittha fruits.'

The Brāhmaṇas were discomfited, and had no replies to give. Manovega explained to Pavanavega various other flaws in the religion and scriptures of Brāhmaṇas; he expounded to him how the heretical creeds originated; and he also propounded Jaina principles and practices at length. Pavanavega came to possess samyaktva and duly accepted the vows of a Śrāvaka. Both Manovega and Pavanavega led a happy life of religious householders.

The Purāṇa-like beginning, the religio-didactic discourse in the form of madhu-bindu-dṛṣṭānta, the abnormal proportion of folk-tales introduced by way of illustration, the different names of characters, immediate purpose of converting Pavanavega to Jainism by his pious friend Manovega, constant repetition of moral teachings and religious prescriptions, casual and side attacks on gods and holy men, and above all the general frame-work of the story make Dp. much different from Dhū. But if we go a bit deeper and study Dp. more analytically and scrutinisingly, the inner kernel of Dp., though heavily superimposed with good many accessories and details, remarkably corresponds with that of Dhu. The mode of presentation is somewhat different, but the purpose is the same. Dhū, is a satiric attack on the Purānic legends referring to deities and holy personalities; and Dp., as indicated even by its name, is out to scrutinize the credentials of other religions by criticising their deities and mythology. of course for a specified and immediate aim of converting Pavanavega. Haribhadra's concluding suggestion (V. 122) that the study of Dhū. leads to darsana-suddhi has been fully developed later1: Dp. actually converts Pavanavega who comes to possess samyaktva; and the narration of the Dhū,story, according to Sanghatilaka, makes Vaisramana-śresthin a pious believer (su-śrāddha) with firm faith in Jina. What is implicit, artistic and detached in the Dhurtakhyana becomes outspoken, religio-didactic and propagandistic in the Dharmapariksā. In Dhū, the five Dhūrtas narrate tales of fantastic personal experience, and some points from them are confirmed to be reliable by other Dhurtas after quoting parallel legends from Puranas. In Dp. Manovega himself, being a Vidyādhara, assumes six different forms; and then he either presents an inconsistent situation or narrates an improbable tale of personal experience. When his inconsistencies are exposed by the learned gathering of Brāhmaņas, he silences them by quoting similar episodes from their. Purānas. Besides this fundamental similitude between Dhū. and Dp., there are closely corresponding motifs in the fantastic autobiographical tales; and some of the confirmatory legends are common. Muladeva and the Jaina monk tell nearly the same episode of Kamandalu and Elephant². Immediatly after their birth, Khandapānās son walked away taking leave of his mother; and Tāpasa demanded food and accepted renunciation. Sasa lifted up the elephant-hide-bag full of oil; and the two jackals, in the Buddhist monk's tale, lift up a Stūpa. Elāṣādha's head, cut off by the thieves, eats badara fruits on the tree; and the Svetāmbara monk throws his head on the tree in order to eat kapittha fruits. Legends like Brahman's lotus or hair sticking at Vișnu's navel, Vyāsa's birth, Monkeys lifting mountains, and the physical make up of Jarāsamdha and Sanmukha are quoted in both Dhū. and Dp. to confirm almost common motifs. Though not in identical contexts there are many details and legends common to both Dhū. and Dp.: loose morals of gods (Dhū. I. 60 f.; Dp. XI. 21 f.); Brahman and Tilottamā (Dhū, I. 58-84; Dp. XI. 29 f.);

¹ Though the Dhū. does not mention any such event, the Prabhāvakacarita of Prabhācandra (A. D. 1277) records that Haribhadra diverted that layman Kārpāsika from partiality for the Bhārata and Itihāsas by telling him the five stories of rogues (kitava-kathānaka-pañcaka), and won him over to the Jaina faith (verses IX. 207-12). Prabhācandra quotes V. 120 thus: एवं लोइयक्चं गद्धिलंडं व बाहिरे महं। अंतो फोडिजांतं तुसबुसमुसमीसियं सञ्चं॥; and to explain this verse Haribhadra is said to have composed the Dhūrtākhyāna.

² Two adjectives of the elephant are almost common to Dhū, and Dp.

Indra and Ahalyā (Dhū. V. 33-36; Dp. XI. 61 f.); Agni's mating with Yama's beloved¹ (Dhū. V. 26-30; Dp. XI. especially 82 f.); Agastya drinking the ocean (Dhū. IV. 27; Dp. XIII. 18 f.); Kuntī's sons from Sūrya etc. (Dhū. I. 82 f., V. 11, 23, 37; Dp. XIV. 91, XV. 11); the male organ of Śiva (Dhū. I. 39-4, V. 59; Dp. XIII. 80)²; etc.

The hungry Dhurtas narrating their experiences and confirming the same with Puranic legends during a rainy week, with their dinner depending on the decision of their discussion, present a back-ground (in Dhū.) which is much dissimilar to that depicted in Dp. in which a learned gathering of Brāhmaņas of Pataliputra is visited on six successive days by Manovega (with his friend Pavanavega) who, modestly avoiding debate with Brāhmanas even after he beats the drum and sits on the golden seat, narrates fantastic tales and himself confirms the same with Puranic legends, when challenged about the veracity of his statements. In Dhū, it is the autobiographical experience that forms the back-bone of the story, the points of which are confirmed by Puranic legends; and so it is in the last four stories, i. e., III-VI, of the Dharma-parīkṣā. The first two contexts in Dp., i. e., I and II, present not an inconsistent and improbable story, but an incredible situation presented to the eye: those who have ornaments on their body cannot be grass-faggot-sellers, and a cat which is claimed to scare away rats at miles' distance by its presence cannot have its ears eaten by rats. The first situation is justified by the example of Visnu; and the second by saying that a single flaw of the cat can be tolerated or ignored as in the case of god Agni. The Dhu. has no Brahmanic audience explicitly before it, while in Dp. Manovega is actually made to encounter the Brāhmaņas in their own citadel and to outwit them by openly pointing out and criticising inconsistent elements in the Puranic mythology. The episode of the Buddhist monk in Dp. (No. V) is not quite successful, because it affords opportunity to satirize only one legend from the Rāmāyana.

Jayarāma's Dp. is not available to us, and Hariṣeṇa's Dp. is still in MSS. If we are to be guided by Amitagati's work, we find that he attacks vehemently the Purāṇic deities, even when they do not figure in the legends satirised; here and there he adds certain Purāṇic stories, as they ought to be and as they are accepted by Jaina tradition; now and then he offers pithy maxims of worldly wisdom and sections of didactic teaching; he loses no opportunity to denounce worldly pleasures and prescribe religious discourses; and he not only criticises Purāṇic religion but adds also substantial details on Jaina mythology, dogmatics and ethics. These are some of the specialities of the Dp. text as it came to be shaped by Amitagati.

¹ The legend in Dhū. is shorter; and we do not find there the name of Chāyā and her association with Mandapakauśika, given in Dp.

² The town of Ujjaini with its northern park is introduced in both Dhū. (I. 2-3) and Dp. (I. 58, 64), though in different contexts.

The points of similarity, already noted above, do indicate that Javarāma must have used the Dhūrtākhyāna of Haribhadra or some subsequent recension of it. The agreement is of a fundamental character and cannot be brushed aside as accidental or incidental. The illustrative sub-stories and the tales of four fools, included in Dp., show that some other popular stories have been intelligently used. Haribhadra by his satirical genius of a very high order merely smashed the structure of Purānic mythology, but the authors of Dp. have gone a few steps ahead that they tried to erect instead a superstructure of Jaina religious preaching. The artistic mould of Dhū. is missed; but a form of effective propaganda has been evolved, and it became much popular in subsequent centuries as indicated by the number of Dp. texts in different languages1. It is quite natural that Amitagati, or even his predecessors, utilised different and additional Puranic legends for the same purpose. The Dp. texts are stamped with a definite religious bias: perhaps that prohibited them from admitting a character like Khandapana, and on that account some of the fantastic tales are toned down, in some cases being followed by a few Puranic legends. It is interesting to note that sometimes Amitagati, though he is a full-fledged propagandist, writes in a half-serious, mocking mood, even when he introduces a Digambara monk (Dp. XII, 88 f.). That is a befitting tone for a satirical writer. The Dhurtakhyana of Haribhadra, we have seen, is a unique satire; and its successors like the Dharma-parīkṣā are a fine specimen of Indian literature which is both interesting and instructive. The caustic prick, which such works might have given to the zealous followers of Puranic religion, has not much effect on the dispassionate student of Indian literature: for him every novel aspect adds to the wealth of the great literary heritage of the past.

7. Prākrit Dialect and Style of Dhūrtākhyāna

The Prākrit text of Dhūrtākhyāna, presented in this edition, is based only on two MSS.; and still one is faced with difficulties, here and there, in construing and interpreting it satisfactorily. It is, therefore, far from being final; and any attempt to prepare an exhaustive grammar of it is out of question at present. It is intended here just to note a few salient features of the Prākrit dialect of Dhū., as it stands in this edition.

It has been a recognised convention with the editors of Ardhamāgadhī and Jaina Māhārāṣṭrī texts to use almost uniformly initial n and non-initial n;

¹ My friend Prof. D. L. Narasimhachar, Mysore, draws my attention to one more Dp. (in addition to those which I have mentioned in my paper on Harisena's Dp.) in Kannada by Candrasāgara Varņi. He has seen a ms., and has kindly sent some extracts to me. We learn the following details from them: The Dp. of. Vṛttavilāsa, the pupil of Rāvala Yatīśvara, could be understood only by the learned; so the Śrāvakas of Belugula requested Cārukīrti Paṇḍitācārya to get propered a rendering of it in modern Kannada (Kamnada-vyākhyānadalli mādisi kodiembadāgi). This then, at the instance of Cārukīrti, came to be composed by Candrasāgara who offers salutation to both Cārukīrti and [Lakṣmīsena] Svāmi of Kolhapur. It is written in simple Kannada, mostly in prose. Following Vṛttavilāsa's Dp. it has ten chapters. It is said to be written in Śaka 1770 (+78=1848 A. D.), Ānanda Samvatsara.

Hemacandra's rule (VIII. i. 228-9) is optional; and Dhū. shows definite partiality for n, whether initial or non-initial. Perhaps following the Ms. B, which conforms to the more strict rule of Hemacandra', \dot{y} -śruti is not introduced after vowels other than α or \bar{a} ; but the text shows many exceptional cases, for instance: $ku\dot{m}\dot{q}i\dot{y}\alpha$ I. 58, $da\ddot{v}\dot{\alpha}$ III. 48, $dugga\ddot{v}\ddot{a}$ V. 92, $dhar\dot{v}\ddot{a}$ I. 91; $mu\dot{v}aha$ IV. 71, $su\dot{v}a\dot{m}$ II. 51, $hanu\dot{v}\ddot{a}i$ III, 44. It appears that Ms. A represents a more correct situation, namely, to put \dot{v} -śruti along with the udvrtta vowel, α or \bar{a} , irrespective of the preceding vowel; and Jacobi also uniformly follows this rule in his ed. of the Samarāiccakahā of Haribhadra.

In the absence of separate Nāgarī orthographical symbols for ĕ and ŏ, as distinguished from those for e and o, we find that i and u are easily substituted for ĕ and ŏ before conjuncts etc., where e and o are to be pronounced short². The point at issue is complicated by the fact that beside the writing of i and u for ĕ and ŏ, we must also admit, in some cases, the change of these short vowels to i and u. General principles like the weakening at the end, the original Sanskrit formation, and analogy would establish some system and decide a few points. Sometimes this gives quite a deceptive appearance to certain nominal and verbal forms etc.: ekatah eva>ĕkkattŏ ccia>ikkattu (also ekatto = ĕkkatto?) ccia IV. 73; ettio>ittio I. 38; kuṁdiāĕ I. 40 but gīvāi I. 84 and Nīlāi V. 11; Kuṁtēe and Kuṁtīi V. 11, 37; gotra>gŏtta>gutta V. 39; cakrah iva>cakkŏ vva>cakku vva IV. 5; kṣetra>chĕtta>chitta IV. 1-2; yogya>jŏgga>jugga V. 78; dŏnni>dunni I. 81; pĕccham>piccham II. 5, 9; pŏtṭa>puṭṭa II. 44; bĕṁti>biṁti I. 11; samūhŏ tti>samūhu tti III. 57; śreṣṭhī>sĕṭṭhī>siṭṭhī V. 94; sŏ cciya>su cciya I. 94, V. 113; hŏjja>hujja I. 59, 88; etc.

Now and then we come across certain forms which show a change in the quantity of vowel: -ī of the Present 3rd p. sing. III. 97, IV. 6 (cf. Samarā. p. 249, l. 18; p. 276, l. 6); uahi IV. 30; jia IV. 35; māria IV. 47; laya I. 3; -mmī of the Loc. sing. I. 4, 23, 36, 51, II. 34, IV. 37, 88, V. 14, 78, 112 (usually at the close of a pāda; cf. Samarā. p. 80, l. 12; p. 652, last line); vī V. 17, 32 (also Paüma., 17. 12); sua III. 54; etc. All these are due to exegencies of metre rather than being special grammatical forms. In this category may be included aranī for aranya³ II. 31, tesi for tesim I. 6, kaḍū for kaḍḍū IV. 35, etc.; also bandhassā for bandhassa in Samarā., p. 652, l. 17.

There are many forms which show that a short vowel followed by an anusvāra and the corresponding long vowel get mutually exchanged; in some cases the text itself preserves both the forms: chammāsa (metrically

I It has to be noted that Hemacandra himself knew cases which went against his rule; and it is probable that he is following some grammatical tradition, while the practice even in his own days was to write it in all places irrespective of the preceding vowel.

required) I. 52, chammāsani I. 32, chammāsā I. 28, 89; dhāram, dhārā I. 28-9; mukkhatthā IV. 37 (also Paumacariya kāranatthā 5. 87); vahatthā IV. 27, 80; sakkā III. 20; Sīā for Sīam II. 67 (Pauma, jattā kāūna 5, 86); nivvui for nivvuim V. 51 (see Pauma. uppattī 1. 38, nivvuī 5. 124, raī 6. 240); vilav amānī V. 100; sitthi for sitthim V. 99; bhaniū III. 20. The Abl. sing. of mas. and neu. in -am, noted by Alsdorf' in the Vasudevahindī, appears to me a similar case in which -am and -a are being interchanged. The Paumacariya gives plenty of such cases: I have noted only a few. This exchange has not resulted from any defective writing. Both of them have the same metrical value and phonetic quantity, and they mutually alternate as a purely phonetic variant. This interchange is not sporadic just affecting a few forms of our text. It appears to have been a regular phenomenon which has left its influence on the different aspects of Middle Indo-Aryan2. Once we accept it, many strange words and forms (besides those noted above) get easily explained, for instance, samrakkhana & sārakkhana, simha & sīha, mamsa & māsa; in Pāli vāgīsa & vamgīsa, sanātana & sanamtana; etc. Probably this has arisen out of uncertain pronunciation of a short vowel followed by an anusvāra.

Intervocalic g is not only retained sometime: jage IV. 43; nāge IV. 46; sāgara III. 75, also sāyara IV. 27, but k also is softened to g: egāginā IV. 31; kamalāgara V. 53; etc. Intervocalic d is retained in some cases: udara III. 85; udahi IV. 89; tilloda IV. 21, also tilloa IV. 7.

Instances like ten'ayagarena V. 67, $divas'avas\bar{a}ne$ IV. 9, $Bh\bar{a}rah'ava-y\bar{a}ra-k\bar{a}le$ I. 82 illustrate Jacobi's rule³ of dropping of the final a of the first word when followed by a even when in turn followed by a short syllable. As typical Samdhis we might note asti+eșa=atthesa IV. 14, $rtusn\bar{a}t\bar{a}>uunh\bar{a}y\bar{a}>unh\bar{a}y\bar{a}$ V. 8.

Some of the proper names show some phonetic changes: Agastya = Agasthi I. 63, IV. 27, the Sanskrit verse regularly reads Agastin 265; $Ahaly\bar{a} = Ahill\bar{a}$ V. 33, $M\bar{a}rkan\dot{q}eya = Makkam\dot{q}a$ II. 31, $P\bar{a}r\bar{a}sura$ I. 63, V. 13 (note the v. l.), $R\bar{a}mana^4$ II. 62, 68, 71 and rarely $R\bar{a}vana$ III. 93, Vasistha = Visittha I. 63.

Some words change their bases: kamamadala I. 32-3, beside kamamadalu I. 21-3; Bambhāna V. 116 (also Pauma. 5. 122); manasā I. 50; Khamadavāna for Khamdavānā IV. 14. — A few words stand without the termination of the subject or object: gammagamma IV. 85, gaya-kacchava IV. 61, sambhama IV. 81, hiāhia IV. 85 (for similar cases see Pauma. 1. 6, 36 etc.). - The form Agatthinam is Inst. sing.; such forms are already noted by Pischel (§ 379) in Ardhamagadhi; and plenty of them are found in the Paumacariya 12.113, 13.10, 15.20, 16.32 etc. A form like Agatthina would be quite regular in Apabhramsa. Uvvasīya V. 115 is Gen. sing. (for such forms of. Tiloyapannatti 1. 241, 2. 208, etc., also 4. 42, the termination for Gen. and Loc. being the same). Loc. sing. kucchimmi II. 41, also kucchie II. 38. — Inst. sing. of asmad is me III. 3, V. 21, 32; perhaps me is represented by mi at V. 32, second line. Looking at the use of mi at II. 2 and IV. 2, 4, one finds that it is serving the purpose of both aham (through Inst. sing. me, with p. p. p. as the predicate) and asmi (through the forms amhi, mhi, ammi, mmi). Hemacandra is quite aware of such forms; and Pischel has square-bracketed them in the absence of authentic usage. Lately Alsdorf' has noted such cases from the Vasudevahindi; and it will be seen that the forms of asmad have affected analogically those of yuşmad. — At IV. 24 tam stands for tvam. Instr. sing. is to I. 87, also tume.

² Consult also Pischel's Grammatik. §§ 75, 114, 181 and 339. Dr. A. M. Ghatage has discussed this in his paper 'Linguistic Nature of Prākrit Languages' read at the 11th All-India Oriental Conference, Hyderabad. He regards it as a case of extension of the original alternance arising from cases where it is due to normal causes.

Of the verbal forms we may note a few. Present 1st p. sing.: paribhamami IV. 3, V. 51, also paribhamāmi III. 1; 3rd p. sing.: tappaï I. 55, 59, perhaps from the passive base (also Pauma. 9. 55). — Imp. 2nd p. sing de V. 78; in the light of the available material, its stages of evolution can be shown thus: dehi dehi>de-dehi, naturally then de can stand for dehi. Our text gives a form ehehi II. 36 (v. l. che ehi, perhaps a scribal improvement on eehi); and the Paumacariya gives some such forms: haṇa haṇa 69. 112, ehehi 44. 53, e-chi 8. 174, thā-thāhi 45. 10³. The form suṇijasu I. 53 (cf. Pauma. 38. 46 khamejjāsu) started perhaps with the passive augment but here in the active sense⁴. — The lengthening of i in bhaṇīhāmo V. 3 has parallels in the Paumacariya: vaccīhāmo V. 190, bhavīhāmi 118. 63, etc. — ahesi IV: 33 is to be traced back to Aorist *abhaviṣīt (Pischel 516 and Hema. VIII iii. 164). — pecchamī II. 5, 9, is apparently used in the sense of the Present 1st p. sing. — At III. 15 chima is used as the base.

-um or tum is the well-known termination of the Infinitive; but many forms in this text are used with the Gerundive sense: oyarium IV. 2, kāum IV. 50, gamtum I. 66, III. 40, 43, chinnium III. 15, namium II. 9, sāmatheum III. 9, 28, 56 (cf. Pauma. 1. 10, 2. 60, 5. 38, etc.). The Gerundives with -ittu and -ūna are available in this text, see I. 71, V. 43, 48, 87, 102. The form pimdevi III. 18 is Gerundive, quite usual in Apabhramsa; and parallels ara found in the Pauma. 11. 99, 41. 63, 43. 48. — There is one usage of the Infinitive paribhuttum-je I. 45 which deserves special attention. je is used as a proclitic here. Such forms are found in the Paumacariya also ghĕttum-je 1. 14, hamtum-je 53. 54, nāum-je 118. 62. According to Hemacandra (VIII. ii. 217) this je is merely an expletive for pāda-pūrane.

At III. 58 and V. 111 jattena and loena are used in the sense of Loc., so also -samthiehim & -rattehi either stand for Loc., or even Gen. Similar instances are found in the Ācārānga as well. It is interesting to note that Apabh. has a common termination -him in the Instr. and Loc. pl. Loc. for Inst.: vālaggamte I. 24, 53 (cf. Paum. 8. 42, 94); Loc. for Abl.: pāesu II. 45, bāhāsu I. 37, ūrūsu I. 37 (but ūrūhim II. 46²). — nāma nāmena I. 7, IV. 7, is just a repetition³. Parallels for it are found in the Mahābhārata (Virāṭa 2. 1), Rāmāyaṇa and Paumacariya 2. 8, 21. In the Pauma. (41. 46) and Vasudeva-hiṇḍī (p. 12) nāma is suffixed to the proper name, Aggikeu-nāmo, Jambu-nāmo; and these are later on again followed by nāmena. — One feels from giri vva II. 34, limḍa vva V. 120 that perhaps vva is being used for vat.

The dialect used by Haribhadra has much common with that of Paümacariya; and some of the traits have definite stamp of antiquity in the evolution of Prākrits. In view of its inheritance of certain Ardhamāgadhī characteristics and its close affinity with the idiom of Paümacariya, we may call it Jaina Māhārāṣṭrī, following the terminology of Jacobi and Pischel.

The style of Dhūrtākhyāna, on the whole, is simple and fluent, and quite suited to the conversational tone in which the rogues are carrying on their learned wrangling. Haribhadra follows here the epic model, and is addressing an audience of mediocre education and not a learned gathering. No artificial attempt is made to embellish the language with poetic ornaments. The author's mastery over canonical language has unconsciously introduced expressions like sannihia-pāḍihero, sannddha-baddha-kavayā etc. (II. 6, 10) which remind us of Ardhamāgadhī phrases. In descriptions, however, the normal style has not been maintained: long compounds are easily introduced in describing the rainy season (I. 8 f.), Ganges (I. 25 f.), Tilottamā (I. 62 f., II. 29 f.), etc. The description of the cemetary (V. 82 f.), though quite dignified as a piece of composition, is not only out of place and proportion, but also conspicuously pedantic in its construction in this small work. The first four fantastic tales are remarkably racy in their style, and the handling of expression is quite in keeping with the presentation of events.

¹ Some illustrations are already noted from the Paṇhāvāgaraṇāim; and Dr. Sen has observed thus: "The infinitive with -je, which occurs twice (giṇhium-je p. 122a, giṇheum-je p. 113a), occurs in the canon not earlier than in some late gāthā-prakīrṇaka." My most sincere thanks I offer to Achārya Jinavijayaji, the learned Editor of the Dhūrtākhyāna in Prākrit, Sanskrit and Gujarāti, who kindly requested me to associate myself with his edition by contributing a critical Essay. I had realized the importance of this work a couple of years back, and I gladly welcomed this opportunity of studying the Dhūrtākhyāna which is a remarkable satire in Indian literature. My thanks are also due to Dr. R. N. Dandekar, Poona; Dr. S. K. De, Dacca; Dr. A. M. Ghatage, Kolhapur; and Mr. K. D. Pednekar, M.A., Kolhapur, who helped me with some books, references and suggestions.

Demy quarto pp. 12+136. Price Rupees 3-12-0.
- 2. Purātana-Prabandha-Saingraha: This is a noteworthy collection of many old Prabandhas similar and analogous to the matter in the Prabandhacintāmaṇi. Authentically edited with Indices of Verses and Proper Names, a short Introduction in Hindī describing the Mss. and materials used in preparing this part and with plates by JINA VIJAVA MUNI. Demy quarto pp. 15+32+156+8. Price Rupees 5-0-0.
- 3. Prabandhacintāmani (Complete Hindi Translation): A complete and correct Hindi translation is given in this volume, so as to enable the purely Hindi-knowing public to grasp fully the contents of the original. The translator is Pandit Hajāriprasād Dwivedi, Ācārya, Hindi Deptt. Vis'vabhāratī, S'āntiniketan. Along with the translation has been given an exhaustive Introduction in Hindi by the General Editor, Muni Jina Vijayaji, which contains useful material for the proper understanding of the text. Demy quarto pp. 12+12+156. Price Rupees 3-12-0.
- 6. Prabandhakos'a of Rājas'ekharasūri (A. D. 1349): Part I, Text in Sanskrit with Variants, Appendices and Alphabetical Indices of stanzas and all Proper Names. This gives twentyfour biographical Prabandhas dealing with celebrities of ancient India such as Bhadrabāhu, Mallavādi, Haribhadra, Sātavāhana, Vastupāla etc. Critically edited in the original Sanskrit from good old Mss. with Variants, Hindī Translation, Notes and elaborate Introduction etc. by JINA VIJAYA MUNI. Demy quarto pp. 8+8+136+14. Price Rupees 4-0-0.
- 7. Devānanda-Mahākāvya of Meghavijayopādhyāya (Sam. 1727): This is a Sanskrit poem in ornate style composed as a Samasyā-pūrti incorporating some line or the other, in each verse, from the S'is'upālavadha of Māgha. In its seven cantos, it presents a biography of Vijayadevasūri who was honoured by both Akbar and Jehangir. Critically edited from an old Ms. with Notes, Index and Hindī Introduction, summary etc. by Pt. Bechardas J. Doshi. Demy quarto pp. 8+16+80. Price Rupees 2-12-0.
- 8. Jaina Tarkabhāṣā of Yas'ovijaya (A. D. 1624-1688): It is a manual of Nyāya dealing with Pramāṇa, Naya and Nikṣepa. Edited by Pt. Sukhalalji Sanghavi with his Tātparyasaingrahā Vṛtti and an Introduction in Hindī. Super Royal 8vo pp. 8+8+14+78. Price Rupees 1-12-0.

- 9. Pramāṇamīmāmsā of Hemacandrācārya: This is a treatise on Nyāya left incomplete perhaps by the author himself. It propounds the Jaina point of view after reviewing the tenets of other systems. Edited with a valuable Introduction and still more valuable Notes in Hindī by Pt. Sukhalalji Sanghavi and Pts. Mahendrakumara and Malavania. Super Royal 8vo pp. 8+16+56+76+144+36. Price Rupees 5-0-0.
- 10. Vividhatīrthakalpa of Jinaprabhasūri (A. D. 1332): Part I, Text in Sanskrit and Prākrit with Variants, and an Alphabetical Index of all Proper Names. This work gives a description of nearly 60 holy places together with the names of their founders etc.; and thus forms a sort of guide-book or gazetteer of Jaina sacred places of India of the 14th Century. It contains valuable information of historical and topographical interest. Critically edited with Variants, Notes and elaborate Introduction etc. by JINA VIJAYA MUNI. Demy quarto pp. 8+16+114+14. Price Rupees 4-4-0.
- 11. The Life of Hemacandrācārya: The eminent German orientalist, Dr. G. Bühler, wrote in 1889, an epoch-making essay in German on Hemacandra (A. D. 1088-1173) who occupies a place of honour in Indian literature. This essay is a fine model of historical research; and, as such, for the benefit of English knowing readers, it has been translated here into English by Dr. Manilal Patel. Demy quarto pp. 16+104. Price Rupees 3-8-0.
- 12. Akalanka-Granthatrayam comprising Laghiyastrayam with Svopajña-vṛtti, Nyāya-vinis'caya and Pramāṇasaṅngraha: These are three noteworthy Nyāya works of Akalankadeva (c. A. D. 720-780), the last two being brought to light for the first time. Edited with Critical Notes, Variant Readings, Introduction [in Hindī] and Indices etc. by Pt. Mahendrakumara. Super Royal 8vo pp. 8+14+118+184+60. Price Rupees 5-0-0.
- 13. Prabhāvakacarita of Prabhācandrācārya (A. D. 1277): Part I, Text in Sanskri, with Variants and Indices of stanzas and all Proper Names. It presents in ornate style the traditional biographies of twenty eminent personalities including religious teachers like Vajrasvāmi, authors like Haribhadra and Hemacandra and poets like Mānatunga who have contributed to the glory of Jainism and the Jaina church. Critically edited from many old Mss. with Notes, Index and Hindī Introduction by Jina Vijava Muni. Demy quarto pp. 10+6+226. Price Rupees 5-0-0.
- 14. Bhānucandra-caritra of Siddhicandra Upādhyāya: This is a remarkable composition of Sanskrit litarature in which an able pupil, namely, Siddhicandra has chronicled, without the least exaggeration, acts of social and religious service rendered by his great Guru Bhānucandra. It is not only a biography of the Guru but also an autobiography of the pupil, both of whom had connections with and were honoured at the Moghul court by Akbar and Jehangir. The English Introduction by the Editor is a rich mine of historical information. Critically edited from a single rare Ms. with elaborate Introduction, Summary, Appendices, Indices etc. by M. D. Desai. Demy quarto pp. 8+12+104+68. Price Rupees 6-0-0.

- 15. Jňānabindu-prakarana of Yas'ovijaya Upādhyāya: This is a systematic manual of Jaina epistemology. The Hindī Introduction of the editor is a brilliant exposition of Jaina theory of knowledge in the back-ground of Indian metaphysics. The Sanskrit Text edited with Introduction, Notes and Index etc. by Pt. Sukhlalaji Sanghavi, Pt. Dalsukh Malvania and Pta. Hira Kumari Devi. Super Royal 8vo pp. 12+8+84+136. Price Rupees 3-8-0.
- tales—as many as 157—on all sorts of subjects including folk-tales and parables which inculcate religio-moral principles of Jainism and glorify men of religion and ascetic heroes. They have been selected from the different strata of Jaina literature. The Introduction which is exhaustive and illuminating, evinces mature erudition of the editor. It is the first of its kind in so far as it presents an outlinear survey of Jaina Kathānaka literature in the back-ground of Indian literature. The Sanskrit text is critically edited with Introduction, Notes and Indices by Dr. A. N. UPADHYE, M. A., D. Litt. Super Royal 8vo pp. 20+128+402. Price Rupees 12-0-0.
- 17. Jainapustakapras'astisamgraha: Vol. I. The work contains 111 Pras'astis and 544 colophons, attached at the end of the ancient palm-leaf manuscripts of the Jaina and other works. They throw enormous light on the historical facts, social conditions, the Kulas, Ganas and Gacchas of the Jainas. Their historical importance is on a par with that of the inscriptions and the copperplates. Critically edited with an informative Introduction and ten Appendices by Achārya Jina Vijava Muni. Demy quarto pp. 20+180. Price Rupees 6-8-0.
- 18. Dhūrtakhyāna: The Original Prākrit Text of Haribhadrasūri, Sanskrit metrical Version of Sanghatilaka, an Old-Gujarati Prose Rendering; also an elaborate Critical Essay on the Dhūrtākhyāna by Dr. A. N. Upadhye; Critically edited by Āchārya Jina Vijaya Muni. This is a unique satire in Indian Literature, remarkable for its originality of thought and plot. De luxe edition, Ledger Paper, Super Royal 8vo pp. 8+24+56+70. Price Rs. 5-8-0, Bombay 1944.

[To be Shortly out]

- 19. Kathākos'aprakaraņam of Jines'varasūri: The Prākrit Text with Sankrit commentary. Critically edited by Achārya Jina Vijava Muni. The commentary contains many Prākrit stories, which illustrate various religious virtues and are interesting from the sociological point of view. The tales are a fine specimen of Prākrit narrative literature.
- 20. Yugapradhāna-gurvāvalī. This is a gurvavalī which is unique in Indian Annals inasmuch as it records the year-to-year events in the lines of outstanding Achāryas of Kharatara gaccha, from the 11th to 14th century A. D. It is written in simple and popular Sanskrit. Critically edited by Achārya Jina Vijaya Muni.
- 21. Kumārapālacaritra Samgraha: This is a collection of some unpublished prabandhas connected with the life and times of the great Gurjara King, Kumārapāla of the Chālukya dynasty. They unfold a great deal of fresh historical material. Critically edited with Index etc by Āchārya Jina Vijaya Muni.

- 22. Dharmābhyudaya-Mahākāvya of Udayaprabha: This is a stylistic kāvya in Sanskrit celebrating the religious activities of Vastupāla, the great minister of the Gūrjara King Vīradhavala, and the patron and lover of fine arts & literature. The author is not only a contemporary but also the religious preceptor of Vastupāla. Critically edited with various Indices etc. by Munirāj S'rī Punyavijayaji
- 23. Kīrtikaumudī and other Kāvyas etc. This volume contains various poems & Pras'astis written by authors who flourished at the time of Vastupāla. Kīrtikaumudī of Somes'vara, Sukṛtasamkūrtana-mahākāvya of Arisimha, Sukṛtakirtikallolinī of Udayaprabha and Vastupālapras'astis of Naracandra, Narendraprabha, Jayasimha etc. Included in this volume are a superb supplement of the Dharmābhyudayamahākavya. Critically edited by Munirāj S'rī Punya Vijayaji.
